Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness of spirit, but sober, grave and silent. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.]

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;

Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakespeare.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,

And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,

That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Hubb. Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait. Shakespeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion. Claren.

A third, who, by his gait

And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Leviathans

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.

I describ'd his way,

Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milt. Pa. Lost.

GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's clog.

My heart-blood is well nigh frore, I feel;

And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastorals.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste than the smaller sort. They are both brought from the East-Indies; the small kind from China, and the larger from the island of Java, wherewith the people, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small sort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.

GALA'XY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,

And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,

Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

A brown, for which heaven would disband

The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,

If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley's Sermon.

GALBANUM. n. f.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable; its taste acrid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common anise, of a strong smell, and acrid taste; but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in asthmas, coughs, and hysteric complaints. Hill's Materia Medica.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus. xxiv. 15.

GALE. n. f. [gabling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale

Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shakespeare.

Winds

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd

From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air. Milton.

Umbria's green retreats,

Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEAS. n. f. [galeasse, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Diët.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred gallies, and ten galeasses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERICULATE. adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diët.

Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galiois, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarmenus, and forced again to their galiois. Knolles's History of the Turks.

GALL. n. f. [geala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,

And take my milk for gall, you murth'ring ministers! Shak.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,

Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

It drew from my heart all love,

And added to the gall. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb more peremptorily implies, It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet flavour. Harvey on Consumptions.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown's Vu. Err.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,

And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,

Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakesp.

She still insults, and you must still adore;

Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd. Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]

This is the fatalest wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger; and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch: this may be sore and vexing, but that stupifying and deadening. Government of the Tongue, f. 8.

6. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,

Though he before had gall and rage;

He grows dispirited and low,

He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

7. [From

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind; and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather, and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 635.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;

But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,

And furious thus, and interrupting spoke, Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that my state being gall'd with my expence, I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray on the Creation.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker, b. ii.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

When I shew justice,

I pity those I do not know;

Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shakespeare.

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,

That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding,

That gives me this bold shew of courtesy. Shakespeare's Othello.

All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke. Shak. H. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson's Sermons.

5. To harass; to mischief.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,

Fallen'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe. Dryd. Æn.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison on the State of the War.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GA'LLANT. adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. If. xxxiii. 21.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave,

Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney, b. ii.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight into them than to satisfy himself by what way they may be performed. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.

3. Fine; noble; specious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;

But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,

Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.

4. Inclined to courtship.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,

The gay troops begin

In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.

GA'LLANT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

—What is't for?

—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,

That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,

Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spright. Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;

But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who cares women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The next carried a handsome young fellow upon her back: she had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GA'LLANTLY. adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.

GA'LLANTRY. n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all

The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and enobling study of nature. Glanv. Scept. Preface.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,

Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Granville.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GA'LLASS. n. f. [galeas, French.] A large galley; a vessel of war driven with oars.

My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses,

And twelve tight gallies. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers. Bacon's War with Spain.

GALLE'ON. n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's Apology.

The

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon's War with Spain.

GALLERY. n. f. [galerie, French, derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney, b. i.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakesp.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupola's. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedral proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish-churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,

And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope's Ep. of Horace.

GALLETYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY. n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλέτης, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load

Of ships, hulks, gallies, barks and brigandines. Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, and especially far voyages; the rather by the use of gallies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bacon's New Atlant's.

Jafon ranged the coasts of Asia the Lefs in an open boat, or kind of galley. Raleigh's History of the World.

On oozy ground his gallies moor;

Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South's Sermons.

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, but he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramb.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,

Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.

GALLIARD. n. f. [gaillard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:

You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakesp. Henry V.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the medley of one dance. Bacon's Natural History.

GALLIARDE. n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watry sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French, from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he be'd this conduct; he held the same language that another had be'd before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolinbroke.

In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Classics.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm disclose. Phillips.

GALLIMATIA. n. f. [galimathias, French.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFRY. n. f. [galimaufree, French.]

1. A hoch-poch, or hah of several sorts of broken meat; a medley. Honmer.

They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry, or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.

—Why, sir, my wife is not young.

—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;

He loves thy gallimaufry, friend. Shakespeare.

GALLIOT. n. f. [galliotte, French.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontus with eighty gallies, and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Kneller.

GALLIPOT. n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner.] The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon, Apophth. 227.

Here phials in nice discipline are set;

There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet Garth's Dispensatory.

Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 426.

Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride,

And o'er his gall'pots in triumph ride. Fenton.

GALLON. n. f. [gelo, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped. Wise man's Surgery.

GALLOON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLLOP. v. n. [ga'oper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλωάζειν; but perhaps it comes from gaut, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shak. Macb.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain

His heav'nly limbs, and slow'd with such a mane,

When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatned a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney, b. ii.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queen, b. i.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun salutes the morn,

And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Shak. Tit. Andr.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows. Shakesp. As you like it.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLUP. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GA'LLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortim. Husb.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GA'LLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

To GA'LLOW. v. a. [ægalpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GA'LLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakesp. Henry VI.

GA'LLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in the singular; but by

GA'LLOWS. } more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galga, Gothick; gealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus, furca, Latin; others from גלגל high; others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from ægalpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses. Shakesp. Cymbel.

I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,

This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A little before dinner he took the major aside, and whispered him in the ear, that execution must that day be done in the town, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A production that naturally groweth under gallowses, and places of execution. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.

—Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too. Shakespeare.

GA'LLOWSFREE. adj. [gallows and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowsfree by my consent,

And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GA'LLOWTREE. n. f. [gallows and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,

On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Fai. Queen.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,

Drops into Styx, and turns a soland goose. Cleveland.

GAMBA'DE. } n. f. [gamba, Italian, a leg.] Spatterdashies;

GAMBA'DO. } boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

GA'MBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game, and cheat them.

GA'MBOGE. n. f.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature. It is heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and from many parts of the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia, whence it has its name. Gamboge was not known in Europe 'till 1603, and soon after got into use as a purgative medicine; but the roughness of its operation rendering it less esteemed as such, it got into use in painting, where it yet retains its credit. Hill.

To GA'MBOL. v. n. [gambiller, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen;

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in aukward measures play. Poë.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,

And I the matter will record, which madness

Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GA'MBOL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols. L'Estrange's Fables.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambo's,

With such insufferable rambles? Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

GA'MBREL. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back. Grew.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game. Shakesp.

2. Jest, opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,

And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Fai. Qu.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,

On my refusal, to distress me more;

Or make a game of my calamities. Milton's Agonistes.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,

And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,

Under the colour of his usual game,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men,

To set him free from his captivity. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame

Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,

With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,

With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton's Parad. Lost.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I am distracted in my choice, and know not which to follow. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the tract of the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear

At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;

I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,

At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,

A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:

Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,

And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Poë.

9. Solemn contests exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning. Shakespeare.

Milo, when ent'ring the Olympick game,

With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind. Locke.

GA'MECCOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] Cocks bred to fight.

They managed the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit. Locke.

GAME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,

To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GA'MEKEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GA'MESOME.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicksome; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosma.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

The gamesome wind among her tresses play,

And curleth up those growing riches short. Fairfax, b. iv.

Belial, in like gamesome mood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained. Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamesome.] Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;

The steward brings the deeds, which must convey

The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 1.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,

That fill a female gamester's pate;

What agony of soul she feels

To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,

The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shakesp. Hen. V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business strait. Bacon, Essay 28.

3. A merry frolicksome person.

You're a merry gamester,

My lord Sands. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute.

She's impudent, my lord,

And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakespeare.

GA'MMER. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer.

GA'MMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:

A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old. Dryden's Juv. Sat.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,

And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,

That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden's Pers.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,

In thunder leaping from the box, awake

The sounding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my fingering,

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make

A perfect song, others will undertake,

By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,

Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

'GAN, for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel

His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis

Gemunt onusti, vel fude trans sinum

Luçantur actâ, pendulive

Sanguineis luçantur in unæ. Musæ Angl.

GA'NDER. n. f. [gandra, Saxon.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander. Camden's Rem.

One gander will serve five geese. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GANG. v. n. [gangen, Dutch; gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: an old word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,

As they have brewed, so let them bear blame. Spenser.

Your flaunting beaux gang with their breasts open. Arbutn.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking. L'Estrange, Fable 21.

Admitted in among the gang,

He acts and talks as they befriend him. Prior.

GANGHON. [French] A kind of flower. Ainsworth.

GA'NGLION. n. f. [γαγγλίον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts, proceeding from a fall or stroke. It resists, if stirred; if pressed upon the side, is not diverted, nor can be turned round. Harris.

Bonesetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint. Wiseman.

GA'NGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, Fr. gangræna, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon's Natural History.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,

By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away. Wal'er.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wiseman's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison's Spectator.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French, from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits, that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon's Natural History.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,

Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

My griefs not only pain me

As a ling'ring disease;

But finding no redress, ferment and rage,

Nor less than wounds immedicable

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wiseman's Surgery.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GA'NTLET. } gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,

To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden's Juv.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GA'NZ. n. f. [ganza, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,

And savour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras, p. ii.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol. Sh. K. Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house

Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakespeare's Timon.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,

Which we call death; but were it known to all,

What life our souls do by this death receive,

Men would it birth or gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. Sh. Meas. for Meas.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes, Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaoler Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 53.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser's Husbandry.

With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.

I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers, Sermon 18.

2. A breach.

The loss of that strong city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold and lamentable miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap, not unto the kingdom of Hungary only, but to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

He's made master
O' th' rolls and the king's secretary: further Stands in the gap, and treads for more preferment. Shakesp.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stoppt. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shak. King Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap at all in the works of nature.

More's Antidote against Atheism.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,

Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift's Genteel Conversat.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, 'till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,

In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakespeare.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbuthnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave. With for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw hear;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden's Pers.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping
after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stoppt in the church-yard. South's Sermons.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person;
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Sh. H. VI.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Eacon's Natural History.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsura in this whole poem.

Dryden's An. Dedication.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscommon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape t' anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras, p. ii.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Where elevated o'er the gaping croud,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth. J. b. xvi. 10.

GA'PER. n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who stares foolishly.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. It is still in use in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbino!, what gars thee greet?

What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ytern?

Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?

Or art thou of thy loved loss forlorn. Spenser's Pastorals.

GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]

1. Dress; cloaths; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,

Counsel'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange, Fable 37.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths, did wear. Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A faucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GA'RBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish. This etymology is very doubtful.]

1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub

Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
A flum more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old Aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras, p. ii.
Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommon.
When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Dryd. Span. Fryar.
GARBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship. Bailey.
GARBIDGE. n. f. Corrupted for garbage.
All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge is good manure for land. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GARBISH. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.
In Newfou dland they improve their ground with the gar- bish of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO GARBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part;
to separate the good from the bad
But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.
Had our author set down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.
The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble
the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to
it. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
GARBLER. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.
A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.
GARBOIL. n. f. [garbouille, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hanmer.
Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garboils she awak'd. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
GARD. n. f. [garde, French] Wardship; care; custody.
GARDEN. n. f. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]
1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakesf.
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shakesf. R. III.
In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon's Essays.
In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water. Temple.
2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.
3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.
GARDEN-MOULD. n. f. Mould fit for a garden.
They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.
GARDEN-TILLAGE. n. f. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.
Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GARDEN-WARE. n. f. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO GAR'DEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden;
to lay out gardens.
At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection Bacon, Essay 47.
GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.
Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakespeare's Othello.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon's Natural History.
The gardener may lop religion as he please. Howel.
The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn's Kalendar.
Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryd.
GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.
My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 477.

GAKE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Dict.
GARGARISM. n. f. [γαργαρισμός; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.
Apophlegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon's Natural History.
TO GARGARIZE. v. a. [γαργαρίζω; gargariser, French.]
To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.
Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon's Natural History.
This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx;
as when we gargarize. Holder's Elements of Speech.
GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.
The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO GARGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, French; gargogliare, Ital.
gurgel, German, the throat.]
1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.
Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate. Harvey.
The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopt by gar- gling with oxycrate. Wifeman's Surgery.
They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.
I hose which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.
So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.
GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.
His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wifeman's Surgery.
GARGLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immoveable tumour. Quincy.
GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.
The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.
GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, guirland, French.] A wreath of branches or flowers.
Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitsuntide to bear. Sidney.
With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryden's Fables.
Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.
Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.
GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance, and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner.]
It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk;
and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.
Garlick is of an extremely strong, and to most people a disagreeable smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the soles of the feet, which will in a very little time give a strong smell to the breath.
Issues will smell strongly of garlick three or four hours after a person has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taste strongly to their flesh, and in some degree to their eggs.
Bruised, and laid on any tender part of the skin, it corrodes it, and raises blisters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but assists digestion, and strengthens the stomach. Hill.
Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.
'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate's Juven.
GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.
It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of four petals or leaves, which stand erect, the lower part being occupied by a number of chives: the pointal, which is fixed on a long foot-stalk,

stalk, rises from the centre of the empalement, and afterward becomes a globular fleshy fruit; in the centre of which are included many seeds, which are shaped almost like kidneys. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places in the warmer parts of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit about the size of a tennis-ball, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, somewhat like some of the European pears; but has a strong scent of garlick.

GARLICK Wild. n. f.

The characters are: it agrees in every respect with the garlick; but hath, for the most part, a sweet scent; and the flowers are produced in an umbel.

GARLICKEATER n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,

You and your apron men, that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlick eaters. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

GARMENT n. f. [guarniment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloaths; drefs.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,

And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed.

GARNER n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,

Barns and *garner*s never empty. Shakespeare's Tempest.

For sundry foes the rural realm furround;

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,

In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd. Vir. Geo.

To GARNER v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in *garner*s.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakesp. Othello.

GARNET n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin, from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the saphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

Woodward's Met. Fossils.

To GARNISH v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees.

Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,

That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,

Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,

Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakesp. King John.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.

Raleigh's History of the World.

All the streets between the Bridge-foot and palace of Paul's, where the king then lay, were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries.

Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!

Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast! Dryd. Juven. Sat.

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,

Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel. King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters.

GARNISH n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,

Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

Matter and figure they produce;

For garnish this, and that for use;

They seek to feed and please their guests.

Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters.

4. Penjuncula carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GARNISHMENT n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment

The church of Sancta Guistiniana in Padoua is a sound piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, do ravish the beholders.

Wotton's Architecture.

GARNITURE n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in the garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in the furniture of their heads.

Government of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of shew.

Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

Addison's Spectator.

GAROUS adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 4.

GARRAN n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse which when brought into the North of England takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease.

Temple.

GARRET n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,

Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden's Juven. Sat.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthn. J. Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made

Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air,

With licence to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,

To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Swift.

2. Rotten wood.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

Bacon.

GARRETER n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON n. f. [garnison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney, b. i.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,

With a new chain of garrisons you bind.

Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies.

Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON v. a. [from the verb.] To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,

Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine. Dryd. Juven.

GARRULITY n. f. [garrulitas, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here

Expiate, if possible, my crime,

Shameful garrulity.

Milton's Agonistes.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity.

Ray on the Creation.

GARRULOUS adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

Thomson.

GARTER n. f. [gardus, Welsh; jartier, French, from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent-knit. Sh. Tam. of the Shrew.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees.

Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,

And all the trophies of his former loves.

Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

--The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Sh. R. III.

You

G A S

- You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryden.
3. The principal king at arms.
To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.
He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakesp.
A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wifeman's Surgery.
- GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.
- GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses, and very unintelligibly and inconsistently. Har.
- GASCONA'DE. n. f. [French, from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.
Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.
- To GASCONA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.
- To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.
Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.
Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires great art.
Tillotson, Sermon 2.
- See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Convert.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. A. Phillips.
- GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A deep and wide wound.
He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his targe,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Fai. Queen.
A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.
But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milt. P. Lost.
  2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.
I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbutnot.
- GA'SKINS. n. f. [from Gascoigne. See GALLIGASKINS.]
Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.
If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shak. Twelfth Night.
- To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius.]
1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath.
The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryd. Virg. Geo.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats. Dryden.
The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æn.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.
A scantling of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Pale and faint,
He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.
  2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.
I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.
He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he gasps away his breath. Dryden's Æn.
  3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by gasping.
The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gassed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 198.
- GASP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.
  2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.
His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shak. H. VI.
If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison's Rosamond.
Life's business at one gasp be o'er. Pope.
- To GAST. v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To

G A T

- make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.
- When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- GA'STRICK. adj. [from γαστήρ.] Belonging to the belly.
- GASTRO'GRAPHY. n. f. [γαστήρ and γραφία.] In strictness of etymology, signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Sharp's Surgery.
- GASTRO'TOMY. n. f. [γαστήρ and τέτομα.] The act of cutting open the belly.
- GAT. The preterite of get.
Moses gat him up into the mount. Ex. xxiv. 18.
- GATE. n. f. [geat, Saxon.]
1. The door of a city, a castle, palace, or large building.
Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakesp.
Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbands on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
  2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
— Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakesp.
  3. An avenue; an opening.
Auria had done nothing but wisely and politickly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles's History of the Turks.
- GA'TEVEIN. n. f. The vena portæ.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon's Henry VII.
- GATEWAY. n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.
Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To GA'THER. v. a. [gaderan, Saxon.]
1. To collect; to bring into one place; to get in harvest.
I gathered me silver and gold. Ecclus. ii. 8.
Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Gen.
The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20.
  2. To pick up; to glean; to pluck.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shak. Henry VIII.
Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. Jf. lxii. 10.
I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Wotton.
To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees, as the sale of his commodities shall bring it in. Locke.
  3. To crop.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
  4. To assemble.
They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.
Come ye heathen, and gather yourselves together. Joel iii.
He led us through three fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon's New Atlantis.
  5. To heap up; to accumulate.
He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Prov. xxviii. 8.
  6. To select and take.
Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Psf. cvi. 47.
  7. To sweep together.
The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. Mat. xiii. 47.
  8. To collect charitable contributions.
  9. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Jf. lvi. 8.
  10. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress;
to contract.
Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand, Pope.
  11. To gain.
He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.
  12. To pucker needlework.
  13. To

13. To collect logically; to know by inference.

That which, out of the law either of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakefp.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us.
Acts xvi. 10.

Return'd

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is at this time translating Chaucer into modern French: from which I gather, that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

We may easily gather from this passage what notion the ancients had concerning a future state. Notes on the Odyssey.

14. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid

A long time with that savage people staid,

To gather breath, in many miseries.

Spenser.

To GA'THER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the ga'bring clouds we fear,

A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden's Pasts.

When ga'bring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,

And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dry.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,

South, East and West, on airy courfers born,

The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,

And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart seareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclus. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,

The length of breeches, and the gathers,

Part canons, perriwigs and feathers.

Hudibras, p. i.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have ga- thered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other mens stuff. Wotton's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore-fruit. Amos vii.
Nor in that land

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virg.

GA'THERING. n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gather- ings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GA'TTEN-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain:
Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gavau; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwawdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,

Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats.

Shakespeare.

The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,

To give me audience.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

My love to Hermia

Is melted as the snow; seems to me now

As the remembrance of an idle gaude,

Which in my childhood I did doat upon.

Shakespeare.

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,

Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;

Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,

For folded turbants finest holland bear. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,

After so long grief such nativity.

Shakespeare.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of drefs.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South's Sermons.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,

Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaudry known.

Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

GAUDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,

But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;

For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakefp. Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,

As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun-beams.

Milton.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride

Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,

Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold.

Phillips.

GA'UDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterite of give.

Thou can'st not every day give me thy heart;

If thou can'st give it, then thou never gav'st it:

Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,

It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it.

Donne.

GA'VEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mort.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Cowel.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gau ed on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer's battles of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battle.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mixon's Mech. Exer.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gage of your trade and wealth. Loc.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gage, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have, from the beginning, been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and, to this end, appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator.

Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from gefanian, to lessen, Saxon.]

Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

For

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Sh. R. II.

Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embu'd. Dryd. Fables.
GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly

GA'UNTLET. n. f. [gantlet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftnefs for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryd. Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southern.

GA'VOT. n. f. [gavotte, French.] A kind of dance.
The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, sarabands, jigs and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
GAUZE. n. f. A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken cloaths were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin, like gauze. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Brocades and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes,
Are lately brought over. Swift.

GAWK. n. f. [geac, Saxon.]

1. A cuckow.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland.

GAWN. n. f. [corrupted for gallon.] A small tub, or lading vessel.

GA'WNTREE. n. f. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY. adj. [gay, French]

1. Airy; chearful; merry; frolick.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.

Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay. Bar. vi. 9.

GAY. n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY. n. f. [gayeté, French, from gay.]

1. Chearfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

Our gayety and our guilt are all besmurch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakesp. H. V.

GA'YLY. adv. Merrily; chearfully; showily.

GA'YNESS. n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use.

To GAZE. v. n. [ἀγάζειν, or rather γεγαν, to see, Sax.]

To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world:

If so, gaze on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax, b. iv.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclus. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakespeare.

Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being light'ned with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,

If any air of musick touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Not a month

'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

With secret gaze,

Or open admiration, him behold,

On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd

Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder, N°. 27.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;

To grind in brazen fetters, under task,

With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.

GA'ZER. n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermil red did shew,

Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;

The which ambrosial odours from them threw,

And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Queen.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Come, basilisk,

And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight. Shak. Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;

And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts's Logick.

GA'ZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,

The ravish'd hearts of gazeful men might rear

To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser on Beauty.

GA'ZEHOUND. n. f. [gaze and hound; canis agasæus, Skinner.]

A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazehound! how with glance severe

From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer! Tickell.

GA'ZETTE. n. f. [gazetta is a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a news paper, of which the first was published at Venice.]

A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,

And danger great, they challenge all;

Print new additions to their feats,

And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of a gazette. Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTE'ER. n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

2. It was lately a term of the utmost infamy, being usually applied to wretches who were hired to vindicate the court.

Satire is no more: I feel it die:

No gazettier more innocent than I. Pope.

GA'ZINGSTOCK. n. f. [gaze and stick.] A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

GAZON. n. f. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harris.

GEAR. n. f. [gȳman, to cloath; geapne, furniture, Saxon.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; drefs; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Fairy Queen.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,

And vile tormenters ready saw in place,
He broke through. Fairfax, b. ii. Stan. 27.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,

I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear

In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,

You think some goddess from the sky

Descended, ready cut and dry. Swift.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His scourge reacht, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run

At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman's Iliads.

The frauds he learn'd in his fanatick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

3. Stuff. Hanmer.
If fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. [In Scotland.] Goods or riches: as, he has gear enough.

GE'ASON. adj. [A word which I find only in Spenser.] Wonderful.

It to Leeches seemed strange and geason. Hubberd's Tale.

GEAT. n. f. [corrupted from jett.] The hole through which the metal runs into the mold. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

GECK. n. f. [geac, a cuckow; geck, German, a fool; gawk, Scottish.] A bubble easily imposed upon. Hanmer.

Why did you suffer Jachimo to taint his noble heart and brain with needfuls jealousy, and to become the geck and scorn o' th' other's villany? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

To GECK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cheat; to trick.

GEE. A term used by waggoners to their horses when they would have them go faster.

GEESE. The plural of goose.

GE'LABEL. adj. [from gelu, Latin.] What may be congealed or concreted into a gelly.

GE'LATINE. } adj. [gelatus, Latin.] Formed into a gelly; GELA'TINOUS. } viscous; stiff and cohesive.

That pellucid gelatinous substance is an excrement cast off from the shoals of fish that inhabit the main. Woodward.

You shall always see their eggs laid carefully up in that spermatick gelatine matter, in which they are repositied. Derb.

To GELD. v. a. preter. gelded or gelt; part. pass. gelded or ge't. [gelten, German.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of the power of generation.
Geld bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall. Tusser.
Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. To deprive of any essential part.
He bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side,
Gelding th' oppos'd continent as much
As on the other side it takes from you. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. To deprive of any thing immodest, or liable to objection.
They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places that they took away the very manhood of it. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.

GE'LDER. n. f. [from geld.] One that performs the act of castration.
Geld later with gelders, as many one do,
And look of a dozen to geld away two. Tusser's Husbandry.
No sow gelder did blow his horn
To geld a cat, but cry'd reform. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

GE'LDER-ROSE. n. f. [I suppose brought from Guelderland.]
The leaves are like those of the maple-tree: the flowers consist of one leaf, which expands in a circular rose form, and is divided at the top into five parts: these are collected in form of an umbel, the largest of which grow on the outside, and are barren; but those in the middle are fruitful, producing red berries, in each of which is contained one flat heart-shaped seed.
The species are three. If the soil be moist, this plant affords a very agreeable prospect, both in the season when it is in flower, and also in the Autumn, when the fruit is ripe, which generally grows in large clusters, and is of a beautiful colour. Miller.

The gelder-rose is increased by suckers and cuttings. Mort.

GE'LDING. n. f. [from geld.] Any animal castrated, particularly an horse.
Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The lord lieutenant may chuse out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings. Temple.

GE'LD. adj. [gelidus, Latin.] Extremely cold.
From the deep ooze and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flounce. Thomson's Spring.

GELIDITY. n. f. [from gelid.] Extreme cold. Dict.

GE'LDINESS. n. f. [from gelid.] Extreme cold. Dict.

GE'LLY. n. f. [gelatus, Latin.] Any viscous body; viscosity; glue; gluey substance.
My best blood turn
To an infected gelly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
I he tapers of the gods,
The sun and moon, became like waxen globes,
The shooting stars end all in purple gellies,
And chaos is at hand. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
The white of an egg will coagulate by a moderate heat, and the hardest of animal solids are resolvable again into gellies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GELT. n. f. [from geld.] A castrated animal; gelding.
I he spayed gelt; they esteem the most profitable Mortimer.

GELT. n. f. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from gilt.] Tinsel; gilt surface.
I won her with a girdle of gelt,
Emboss'd with bugle about the belt. Spenser's Pastoral's.

GELT. The participle passive of geld.
Let the others be gelt for oxen. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GEM. n. f. [gemma, Latin.]

1. A jewel; a precious stone of whatever kind.
Love his fancy drew;
And so to take the gem Urania sought. Sidney.
I saw his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost, became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair. Shakespeare.
It will seem a hard matter to shadow a gem, or well pointed diamond, that hath many fides, and to give the lustre where it ought. Peacham on Drawing.
Stones of small worth may lie unseen by day;
But night itself does the rich gem betray. Cowley.
The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diaphanous, and either crystal or an adamantine matter; but we find the diaphaneity of this matter changed, by means of a fine metallic matter. Woodward.

2. The first bud.
From the joints of thy prolifick stem
A swelling knot is raised, call'd a gem;
Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows. Denham.
Embolden'd out they come,
And swell the gems, and burst the narrow room. Dryden.
The orchard loves to wave

Norris.

In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals.

Locke.

I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads.

Addison.

2. The publick; the interest of the whole. Not in use.

Neither my place, nor aught I heard of business,

Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general

Take hold on me; for my particular grief

Ingluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. The vulgar. Not in use.

The play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas cavie to the general: but it was, as I received it, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. [General, Fr.] One that has the command over an army.

A general is one that hath power to command an army. Loc.

The generals on the enemy's side are inferior to several that once commanded the French armies.

Pompey had deserved the name of great; and Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

GENERALITY. n. f. [generalité, French, from general.]

1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars.

Because the curiosity of man's wit doth with peril wade farther in the search of things than were convenient, the same is thereby restrained unto such generalities as, every where offering themselves, are apparent to men of the weakest conceit.

Hooker, b. i. f. 6.

These certificates do only in the generality mention the parties contumacies and disobedience.

Ayliffe's Paeragon.

2. The main body; the bulk; the common mass.

There is a great necessity, though not apparent, as not extending to the generality, but resting upon private heads.

Raleigh's Essays.

By his own principles he excludes from salvation the generality of his own church; that is, all that do not believe upon his grounds.

Tillotson, Sermon 1.

The generality of the English have such a favourable opinion of treason, nothing can cure them.

Addison's Freeholder.

They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and applaud themselves for the singularity of their judgment, which has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

Addison's Spectator.

Such treatment has its effect among the generality of those whose hands it falls into.

Addison's Spectator.

The wisest were distracted with doubts, while the generality wandered without any ruler.

GENERALTY. n. f. [from general.] The whole; the totality.

The municipal laws of this kingdom are of a vast extent, and include in their generality all those several laws which are allowed as the rule of justice and judicial proceedings.

Hale.

GENERANT. n. f. [generans, Latin.] The begetting or productive power.

Some believe that the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the later ages.

Glanv. Scept. c. 4.

In such pretended generations the generant or active principle is supposed to be the sun, which, being an inanimate body, cannot act otherwise than by his heat.

Ray on the Creat.

To GENERATE. v. a. [genero, Latin.]

1. To beget; to propagate.

Those creatures which being wild generate seldom, being tame, generate often.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GENERATION. n. f. [generation, French, from generate.]

1. The act of begetting or producing.

Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation: but then the dilation of them, without any new sealing, shews they cannot be impressions.

Bacon's Natural History.

He longer will delay, to hear thee tell

His generation, and the rising birth

Of nature from the unapparent deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many heads of families whom they represent.

Temple.

2. A family; a race.

Y'are a dog.

—Thy mother's of my gen'ration: what's she, if I be a dog?

Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

GE'NET. n. f. [French. The word originally signified a horse-man, and perhaps a gentleman or knight.] A small sized well proportioned Spanish horse.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursfers for cousins, and genets for germanes. Shak. Othello.

It is no more likely that frogs should be engendered in the clouds than Spanish genets be begotten by the wind. Ray.

He shews his statue too, where, plac'd on high, The genet underneath him seems to fly. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

GENETHLI'ACAL. adj. [γενεθλιακός.] Pertaining to nativities as calculated by astronomers; shewing the configurations of the stars at any birth.

The night immediately before he was slighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howell's Vocal Forest.

GENETHLI'ACKS. n. f. [from γενεθλιακός.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

GENETHLIA'TICK. n. f. [γενεθλιακός.] He who calculates nativities.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliatics conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person. Drummond.

GENE'VA. n. f. [A corruption of genevre, French, a juniper-berry.]

We used to keep a distilled spirituous water of juniper in the shops; but the making of it became the business of the distiller, who sold it under the name of geneva. At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt, and the coarsest spirit they have, which is drawn off much below proof strength, and is consequently a liquor that one would wonder any people could accustom themselves to drink with pleasure. Hill's Mat. Medica.

GE'NIAL. adj. [genialis, Latin.]

1. That which contributes to propagation.

Higher of the genial bed by far, And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milt. Parad. Lost.

4. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.

A happy genius is the gift of nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the dead learning of the schools. Burnet's Theory, Preface.

One science only will one genius fit;

So vast is art, so narrow human wit. Pope on Criticism.

The Romans, though they had no great genius for trade, yet were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Nature;

5. Nature; disposition.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points and tropes he flurs his crimes. Dryd.
Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.
He tames the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.
GENT. adj. [gent, old French.] Elegant; soft; gentle; polite.

consists of one leaf, shaped like a cup, being cut into four, five, or more segments: it is succeeded by a membranous oval shaped fruit, ending in a sharp point, opening lengthwise into two parts, and containing many flat roundish seeds, bordered with a leafy rim. Miller.

The root of the gentian is large and long, of a tolerably firm texture, and remarkably tough: it has a faintish and somewhat disagreeable smell, and an extremely bitter taste. It is brought cheap from Germany. Hill's Mat. Medica.

If it be fistulous, and the orifice small, dilate it with gentian roots. Wiseman's Surgery.

GENTIANE'LLA. n. f. A kind of blue colour.

GENTILE. n. f. [gentilis, Latin.]

1. One of an uncovenanted nation; one who knows not the true God.

This day shall gentle his condition. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GENTLEFOLK. n. f. [gentle and folk.] Persons distinguished by their birth from the vulgar.

The queen's kindred are made gentlefolk. Shakesf. Rich. III.
Gentlefolks will not care for the remainder of a bottle of wine; therefore always set a fresh one before them after dinner. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

GENTLEMAN. n. f. [gentilhomme, French; gentiluomo, Ital. that is, homo gentilis, a man of ancestry. All other derivations seem to be whimsical.]

1. A man of birth; a man of extraction, though not noble.

A civil war was within the bowels of that state, between the gentlemen and the peasants. Sidney.

I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

He hither came a private gentleman,
But young and brave, and of a family
Ancient and noble. Otway's Orphan.

You say a long descended race
Makes gentlemen, and that your high degree
Is much disparag'd to be match'd with me. Dryden.

2. A man raised above the vulgar by his character or post.
Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,
Whom I will marry strait to Clarence's daughter. Shakesp.

3. A term of complaisance.
The same gentlemen who have fixed this piece of morality on the three naked sisters dancing hand in hand, would have found out as good a one had there been four of them sitting at a distance, and covered from head to foot. Addison.

4. The servant that waits about the person of a man of rank.
Sir Thomas More, the Sunday after he gave up his chancellorship, came to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's in person. Shak. H. VIII.

GENTLEMANLIKE. } adj. [gentleman and like.] Becoming a

GENTLEMANLY. } man of birth.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant or churl; but enureth himself to his weapon, and to the gentlemanly trade of stealing. Spenser on Ireland.

Pyramus is a sweet-fac'd man; a proper man as one shall see in a Summer's day; a most lovely gentlemanlike man. Shak.

You have train'd me up like a peasant, hiding from me all gentlemanlike qualities. Shakespeare's As you like it.

A gentleman uses the words of gallantry, and gentlemanlike very often in his petition. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 629.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a freeschool, where a gentleman, who happened to have understanding, procured the place for him who was the better scholar and more gentlemanly person of the two. Swift.

GENTLENESS. n. f. [from gentle.]

10 E

When most struck home, being gently warded, craves
A noble cunning. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In the same island a sort of great bat, as men lie asleep with their legs naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them. Grew's Musæum.

GE'NTRY. n. f. [gentlery, gentry, from gentle.]

1. Birth; condition.

You are certainly a gentleman,
Clerk-like experienc'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble name,
In whose success we are gentle. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. Sidney.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast. Bacon's Ornam. Ration.

How cheerfully the hawkers cry
A satire, and the gentry buy. Swift.

2. A term of civility real or ironical.

The many-colour'd gentry there above,
By turns are rul'd by tumult and by love. Prior.

3. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

Shew us so much gentry and good-will,
As to extend your time with us a-while. Shakesp. Hamlet.

GE'NUFLECTION. n. f. [genuflexion, French; genu and flecto, Latin.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Here they make use of all the rites of adoration, genuflections, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted. Stillingfleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be. Tillotson's Sermons.

A sudden darkness covers all;
True genuine night: night added to the groves:
The fogs are blown full in the face of heaven. Dryd. Oedip.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire. Boyle.

GENU'INENESS. n. f. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable. Boyle.

GE'NUS. n. f. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watts's Logick.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus. Harvey on Consumptions.

GE'OCENTRICK. adj. [γῆ and κέντρον; geocentrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harris.

GE'ODÆSIA. n. f. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plane figures. Harris.

GE'ODÆTICAL. adj. [from geodasia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GE'OGRAPHER. n. f. [γῆ and γράφω; geographe, French.] One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers. Brown.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers. Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a meer geographer by love. Tickell.

GEOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [geographique, French, from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country: she geographically describes it to him. Broome on the Odyssey.

GEO'GRAPHY. n. f. [γῆ and γράφω; geographie, Fr.] Geography in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

According to ancient fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbuthnot on Coins.

GEO'LOGY. n. f. [γῆ and λόγος] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GE'OMANCER. n. f. [γῆ and μάντις.] A fortuneteller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

GE'OMANCY. n. f. [γῆ and μαντία; geomance, French.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some persons there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GEOMA'NTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

GE'OMETER. n. f. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age. Watts.

GE'OMETRAL. adj. [geometral, French, from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry.

GE'OMETRICAL. } adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, French, from GE'OMETRICK. } geometry.

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. More's Antid against Atheism.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several weights and powers unto motion or rest. Wukins's Math. Magick.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot? Stillingfleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?

That the dimensions of his glorious face

Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackmore's Creation.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis.

Grew's Musæum.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens.

Wilkins's Math. Magick.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks.

Ray on the Creation.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth therein, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles!

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

TO GEOMETRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize.

Boyle.

GEOMETRY. n. f. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry very probably had its first rise in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, obliged men to distinguish their lands one from another, by the consideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able also to measure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its just dimensions, figure and proportion: after which, it is likely, a farther contemplation of those draughts and figures helped them to discover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which speculations were continually improving, and are still to this day. Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world.

Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,

Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;

Who counts geometry and numbers toys,

And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

GEOPO'NICAL. adj. [γῆ and πόσις; geponique, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

GEOPO'NICKS. n. f. [γῆ and πόσις.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

GEORGE. n. f. [Georgius, Latin.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my George, I am a gentleman;

Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,

On a brown george, with lousy swobbers, fed. Dryd. Pers.

GEO'RGICK. n. f. [γεωργικόν; georgiques, Fr.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

GEO'RGICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's georgick strains,

And learn the labours of Italian swains. Gay's Rural Sports.

GEO'TICK. adj. [from γῆ.] Belonging to the earth; terrestrial.

Dict.

GE'RENT. adj. [gerens, Latin.] Carrying; bearing. Dict.

GE'RFALCON. n. f. A bird of prey, in size between a vulture and a hawk, and of the greatest strength next to the eagle.

Bailey.

GE'RMAN. n. f. [germain, French; germanus, Lat.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german.

They knew it was their cousin german, the famous Amphialus.

Sidney, b. ii.

And to him said, go now, proud miscreant,

Thyself thy message do to german dear. Fairy Queen, b. i.

These Germans did subdue all Germany,

Of whom it hight; but in the end their fire,

With foul repulse, from France was forced to retire. F. Q.

Wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be kill'd by the horse;

wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seiz'd by the leopard;

wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were juries on thy life. Shakesp. Timon.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and genets for germans. Shakesp. Othello.

GE'RMAN. adj. [germanus, Latin.] Related.

Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the hangman. Shakesp.

GE'RMANDER. n. f. [germandrée, French.]

It has small thick leaves, which are lacinated somewhat like those of the oak: the flowers, which are produced at the wings of the leaves, are labiated: the stamina or threads supply the place of the crest, or upper lip: the beard or lower lip of the flower is divided into five parts: the middle segment, which is largest, is hollow like a spoon, and sometimes divided into two parts: the cup of the flower is fistulous. Miller.

GE'RME. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GE'RMIN. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A shooting or sprouting feed.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope

Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins tumble all together,

Even 'till destruction sicken; answer me

To what I ask you.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Thou all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world;

Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once

That make ungrateful man.

TO GERMINATE. v. n. [germino, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon's Natural History.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

GERMINA'TION. n. f. [germination, French, from germinate.]

The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we refer it over unto the place, where we shall handle the subject of plants generally.

Bacon's Natural History.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponsæ nascentes.

Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 25.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone;

there would be no life, no germination.

Bentley's Sermons.

GE'RUND. n. f. [gerundium, Latin.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

GEST. n. f. [gestum, Latin.]

1. A deed; an action; an achievement.

Who fair them quites, as him beseeemed best,

And goodly can discourse of many a noble gest. Fai. Qu.

2. Show; representation.

Gests should be interlarded after the Persian manner, by ages, young and old.

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [From giste, or gite, Fr.] Hanmer.

I'll give you my commission,

To let him there a month, behind the gest,

Prefix'd for's parting.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof; and are conceits of eminent use, to solve magnetical phenomenas.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

GESTA'TION. n. f. [gestatio, Latin.] The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

TO GESTICULATE. v. n. [gesticular, Latin; gisticuler, Fr.]

To play antick tricks; to shew postures.

Dict.

GESTICULA'TION. n. f. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, Fr.

from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

GE'STURE. n. f. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, French.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words, or seen his gestures,

gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself, those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney, b. ii.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,

In ev'ry gesture dignity and love! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 408.

To GETSURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgraceth it; it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. Hooker, b. v.

Undertaking so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him.

Wotton's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

To GET. v. a. pret. I got, anciently gat; part. pass. got, or gotten. [getan, gettan, Saxon.]

1. To procure; to obtain.

Thine be the cosset, well hast thou it got. Spenser's Past.

Of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this glory. Gen. xxxi. 1.

We gat our bread with the peril of our lives. Sam. v. 9.

The pains of hell gat hold upon me. Pf. cxvi. 3.

David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians. 2 Sa. viii. 13.

Most of these things might be more exactly tried by the Torricellian experiments, if we could get tubes so accurately blown that the cavity were perfectly cylindrical. Boyle.

Such a conscience, as has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the utmost and clearest information about the will of God, that its power, advantages, and opportunities could afford it, is that great internal judge, whose absolution is a rational and sure ground of confidence. South's Sermons. He insensibly got a facility, without perceiving how; and that is attributed wholly to nature, which was much more the effect of use and practice. Locke.

He who attempts to get another man into his absolute power, does thereby put himself into a state of war with him. Locke.

The man who lives upon alms, gets him his set of admirers, and delights in superiority. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 219.

Sphinx was a monster that would eat

Whatever stranger she could get,

Unless his ready wit disclos'd,

The subtle riddle she propos'd. Addison's Whig Examiner.

This practice is to be used at first, in order to get a fixed habit of attention, and in some cases only. Watts.

The word get is variously used: we say to get money, to get in, to get off, to get ready, to get a stomach, and to get a cold. Watts's Logick.

2. To force; to seize.

Such losses and scatterlings cannot easily, by any constable, or other ordinary officer, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser on Ireland.

The king seeing this, starting from where he sat,

Out from his trembling hand his weapon gat. Daniel.

All things, but one, you can restore;

The heart you get returns no more. Waller.

3. To win.

Henry the sixth hath lost

All that which Henry the fifth had gotten. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

He gat his people great honour, and he made battles, protecting the host with his sword. 1 Mac. iii. 3.

To get the day of them of his own nation, would be a most unhappy day for him. 2 Mac. v. 6.

Auria held that course to have drawn the gallies within his great ships, who thundering amongst them with their great ordnance, might have opened a way unto his gallies to have gotten a victory. Knolles's History of the Turks.

4. To have possession of; to hold.

Then forcing thee, by fire he made thee bright;

Nay, thou hast got the face of man. Herbert.

5. To beget upon a female.

These boys are boys of ice; they'll none of her: sure they are bastards to the English, the French never got them. Shak.

Women with study'd arts they vex:

Ye gods destroy that impious sex;

And if there must be some t' invoke

Your pow'rs, and make your altars smoke,

Come down yourselves, and, in their place,

Get a more just and nobler race.

Children they got on their female captives.

If you'll take 'em as their fathers got 'em, so and well; if not, you must stay 'till they get a better generation. Dryden.

Has no man, but who has kill'd

A father, right to get a child?

Prior.

Let ev'ry married man, that's grave and wife,

Take a tartuff of known ability,

Who shall so settle lasting reformation;

First get a son, then give him education.

Dorset.

The god of day, descending from above,

Mixt with the day, and got the queen of love. Granville.

6. To gain as profit.

Though creditors will lose one fifth of their principal and use, and landlords one fifth of their income, yet the debtors and tenants will not get it. Locke.

7. To gain as superiority or advantage.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,

Then join you with them like a rib of steel. Shakesp. H. IV.

8. To earn; to gain by labour.

Nature and necessity taught them to make certain vessels of a tree, which they got down, not with cutting, but with fire.

Abbot's Description of the World.

Having no mines, nor any other way of getting or keeping of riches but by trade, so much of our trade as is lost, so much of our riches must necessarily go with it. Locke.

If it be so much pains to count the money I would spend, what labour did it cost my ancestors to get it? Locke.

9. To receive as a price or reward.

Any tax laid on foreign commodities in England raises their price, and makes the importer get more for them; but a tax laid on your homemade commodities lessens their price. Locke.

10. To learn.

Get by heart the more common and useful words out of some judicious vocabulary. Watts.

11. To procure to be.

I shall shew how we may get it thus informed, and afterwards preserve and keep it so. South's Sermons.

 The meaner families, are obliged to return to the steward a small monthly share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Gulliver's Travels.
 GE'WGAW. n. f. [gegar, Saxon; joyau, French.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.
 That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring. Abbot's Deser. of the World.
 Prefer that which providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it. L'Estrange, Fable 1.
 As children, when they throw one toy away,
 Straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.
 A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread
 About his temples, drown'd his narrow head,
 And would have crush'd it. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 10.
 Some loose the bands
 Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws
 For pageantry and tawdry gewgaws. Phillips.
 The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison's Guard.

GE'WGAW. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Feliciano. Law's Serious Call.

GHA'STFUL. adj. [ȝart and fulle, Saxon.] Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits.

Here will I dwell apart,

In ghastful grave, 'till my last sleep

Do close mine eyes:

Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound

Is sign of dreary death. Spenser's Pastorals.

GHA'STLINESS. n. f. [from ghastly.]

1. Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY. adj. [ȝart, or ghost, and like.]

1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

—O, I have past a miserable night;

So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,

So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakefp. Rich. III.

Envy quickly discovered in court Solyman's changed countenance upon the great bassā, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Death

Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear

His famine should be fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestick throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hallelujahs of thrones, principalities and powers. Boyle.

This poor man's desolate wife,

Expects some happy day;

This ghastly thing, the comfort of her life. Flatman.

He came, but with such alter'd looks,

So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,

All pale and speechless. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

I did not for these ghastly visions fend;

Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryd. Ind. Em.

I who make the triumph of to-day,

May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,

Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier! Prior.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.

To be less than gods

Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight,

Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milt.

Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye? Shakefp. Othello.

GHE'RKIN. n. f. [from gurcke, German, a cucumber.] A pickled cucumber. Skinner.

TO GHESS. v. n. [See TO GUESS. Ghefs is by critics considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed.] To conjecture.

GHOST. n. f. [ȝart, Saxon.]

1. The soul of man.

Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him,

That would upon the rack of this rough world

Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Often did I strive

To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood

Kept in my soul. Shak. R. III.

Man, when once cut down, when his pale ghost

Fleets into air, is for ever lost. Sandys's Paraphrase.

2. A spirit appearing after death.

The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose,

And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,

To see this fleet among unequal foes,

By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryd.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.

Their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal, under which

Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shakefp. Jul. Cæs.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.

TO GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.

TO GHOST. v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.

Julius Cæsar,

Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,

There saw you labouring for him. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopat.

GHO'STLINESS. n. f. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.

GHO'STLY. adj. [from ghost.]

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have,

as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid. Hosker, b. v.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feeleth. Hosker, b. v. f. 35.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians. King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,

His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. Sh. Ro. and Jul.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift. Shakefp. H. VI.

GIAL'ALINA. n. f. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour; found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters. Woodward's Met. Foss.

GIA'MBEUX. n. f. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd,

Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,

That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls. F. 2.

GI'ANT. n. f. [geant, French; gigas, Latin.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.

Now does he feel his axle

Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe

Upon a dwarfish thief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,

And keep their impious turbands on, without

Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Woman's gentle brain

Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;

Such Ethiop words. Shakefp. As you like it.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,

Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milt. Pa. Lost.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh's History.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found

I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden's Æn.

By weary steps and slow

The groping giant with a trunk of pine

Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,

Afflicts the chief t' avenge his giant son,

Great Polypheme, of more than mortal might. Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. f. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteess, and lie under mount Pelion. Shak.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteess. Howel.

GI'ANTLIKE. adj. [from giant and like.] Gigantick; vast; GI'ANTLY. adj. bulky.

Single courage, has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties. Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field. South's Sermons.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. f. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,

Stalking with less unconscionable strides,

And lower looks. Milton's Agonistes.

GI'BBE. n. f. Any old worn-out animal. Hanmer.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wife,

Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gibbe,

Such dear concernings hide? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

TO GI'BBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.

The sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakefp. Haml.

GI'BBERISH. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gipsies; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straitway, that we speak no English, but gibberish. Spenser.

Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

G I B

GI'BBET. n. f. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcases are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at nought? Davies.

You scandal to the stock of verse, a race
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Cleaveland.

Haman suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another. L'Estrange.

Papers of universal approbation, lay such principles to the whole body of the Tories; as, if they were true, our next business should be to erect gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any traverse beams.

To GI'BBET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To hang or expose on a gibbet.

I'll gibbet up his name. Oldham.

the brewer's bucket. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

GI'BBIER. n. f. [French.] Game; wild fowl.

These imposts are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax free. Addison on Italy.

GI'BBOSITY. n. f. [gibbosité, Fr. from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

When two ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Ray.

GI'BBOUS. adj. [gibbus, Latin; gibbeux, Fr.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wifeman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,

Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Crookbacked.

I shall demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia, in all relations, have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed? Brown.

GI'BBOUSNESS. n. f. [from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon;
but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbous-ness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat. Bentley's Sermons.

GI'BCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear. Shakefp.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.]

To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 6.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shakespeare.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you pertly raise your snout,
Fleer'and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria: you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakef. Ant. and Cleop.
Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns

That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakefp. Othello.

The rich have still a gibe in store,

And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Juven.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment.

But the dean, if this secret shou'd come to his ears,

Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GI'BER. n. f. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the

G I D

Come, Sempronius, leave him;

He is a giber, and our present business

If of more serious consequence. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

GI'BINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,

Gibingly and ungravely he did fashion

After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shakef. Coriolanus.

GI'BLETS. n. f. [According to Minshew from g-bbet, gabblet: according to Janius more probably from gibier, game, Fr.]
The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:

'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:

Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,

To make him rich who grudges me my meat?

That he may loll at ease; and pamper'd high,

When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie? Dryden's Pers.

GI'DDILY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam

Giddily, and be every where but at home;

Such freedom doth a banishment become. Donne.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her;

Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune. Shak. Twelfth Night.

GI'DDINESS. n. f. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Megrimms and giddiness are rather when we rise after long fitting, than while we sit. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability; changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief. Bacon, Essay 1.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of heaven rolling and turning us, 'till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries. South's Sermons.

4. Frolick; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent,

Charitably warn'd of thy sins, do'st repent

These vanities and giddinesses.

Donne.

GI'DDY. adj. [gidig, Saxon. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion,
gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade,

By giddy heads and stag'ring legs betray'd. Tate's Juvenal.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel

The giddy motion of the whirling mill.

Pope.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,

More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,

Than womens are. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon's N. Hist.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears

That mortal bliss should last for length of years,

She cast us headlong from our high estate,

And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden's Fables.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,

With noise say nothing, and in parts divide. Dryden's Æn.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift to Gay.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,

The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood.

Prior.

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,

Through all the giddy circle they pursue.

Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,

And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Rowe's Ja. Shore.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfixed.

As we pac'd along

Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,

Methought that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering inticement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakefp.

Like one of two contending in a prize,

That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;

Hearing applause and universal shout,

Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,

Whether those peals of praise be his or no.

Shakespeare.

GI'DDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

G I G

- Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrain'd afs! Otway's Venice Preserved.
- GI'DDYHEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.
And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme descry
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddyheaded antick youth will wear. Donne.
That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddyheaded, hear the testimony of Solomon. Burton on Melancholy.
- GI'DDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.
More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddypaced times. Shakespeare.
- GI'ER-EAGLE. n. f. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.
These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gier-eagle. Lev. xi. 18.
- GIFT. n. f. [from give.]
1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.
They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Mat. ii. 11.
Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less. Dryd. Aureng.
  2. The act of giving.
No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South's Sermons.
  3. Oblation; offering.
Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven: Tob. xiii. 11.
  4. A bribe.
Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wife. Deuter. xvi. 19.
  5. Power; faculty.
And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare.
He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his beloved talent.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 291.
- GIFTED. adj. [from gift.]
1. Given; bestowed.
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.
  2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.
Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and haranged the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryd. Rel. Laici, Preface.
There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 23.
- GIG. n. f. [Etymology uncertain.]
1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.
Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.
  2. [Gigia, Islandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use.
- GI'GANTICK. adj. [gigantes, Latin.] Suitable to a giant;
big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.
Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds! Milt. Pa. Lost.
I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton's Agonistes.
The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs. Dryden's Æn.
The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope's Odyssey, b. vi.
- To GI'GGLE. v. n. [gichgelen, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.
- GI'GGLER. n. f. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.
A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.
We shew our present, joking, giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick's Epilogue.
- GI'GLET. n. f. [geazl, Saxon; gey, Dutch; gillet, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.
Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakesp. Henry VI.
The fam'd Cassibelan was once at point,
Oh giglet fortune! to master Cæsar's sword. Shak. Cymbel.
Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

G I L

- GI'GOT. n. f. [French.] The hip joint.
- To GILD. v. a. pret. gilded, or gi.t. [gilban, Saxon.]
1. To wash over with gold; to cover with foliated gold.
The room was large and wide,
As it some gilt or solemn temple were:
Many great golden pillars did uprear
The massy roof, and riches huge sustain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Gilded wood may worms infold. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet. Shakespeare's K. John.
And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.
Purchasing riches with our time and care,
We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Roscommon.
When Britain, looking with a just disdain
Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,
And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and finews are of coin. Waller.
Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.
  2. To cover with any yellow matter.
Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at. Shakesp. Ant. and Cæopatra.
  3. To adorn with lustre.
No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope's Messiah.
  4. To brighten; to illuminate.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.
  5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the fight. Dryd. Aureng.
- GI'LDER. n. f. [from gild.]
1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bacon's Natural History.
We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer.
Notes on the Odyssey.
  2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings. Phil.
I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare.
- GI'LDING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope's Hor.
- GILL. n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]
1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land; and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milt. P. Lost.
Fishes perform their respiration under water by the gills.
Ray on the Creation.
He hath, on the bottom of his sides, two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but for a good part before them. Walton.
'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King's Fisherman.
  2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.
  3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
  4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.
Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
  5. [From gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.

6. The name of a plant; ground-ivy.

7. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.

Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
And answ'ring ginshops sower sighs return. Pope.

GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, French.]

Gillyflowers, or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, are of a very great variety; but they may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white, the various kinds of which are too many to enumerate. Mortimer's Husbandry.

In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon, Essay 47.

Fair is the gillyflow'r of gardens sweet,

Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay's Pastorals.

GILT. n. f. [from gild.] Golden shew; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,

With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakesf. Hen. V.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mock thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakesf. Timon of Athens.

The double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.

GILTHEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.] A sea-fish. Dict.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,

However, more reduc'd and plain,

The watch would still a watch remain;

But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these transgrams and gimcracks? What, in the name of wonder, are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

GIMLET. n. f. [gibélet, guimbelet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device

Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,

Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shakesf. Hen. VI.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. More's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.]

A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,

And pastime make. Sidney, b. i.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,

Hath slain sir Mordant. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

So stives the woodcock with the gin;

So doth the cony struggle in the net. Shakesf. Henry VI.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakesf. Hen. VI.

If those, who have but sense, can shun

The engines that have them annoy'd;

Little for me had reason done,

If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben. Johnson's Forest.

I know thy trains,

Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;

No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,

Which rats would run their own heads in,

And come on purpose to be taken,

Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hudibras, p. ii.

Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,

And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Fairy Queen.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driveling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coalpits. Woodward on Fossils.

4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,

And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope, Dial. 1.

Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,

And answ'ring gin shops sower sighs return. Pope's Dunciad.

GINGER. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, which are shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in an head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary afterwards becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain their seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromack, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves, cut small in their fallads, and make an excellent sweetmeat of them. Ginger is an excellent carminative and stomachick. Hill's Mat. Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,

And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope's Dunciad.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromack feeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Her currans there and gooseberries were spread,

With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously, nicely.

What is't that you

Took up so gingerly? Shakespeare's Two Gent. of Verona.

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perverseness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

TO GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,

And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found. Gay's Trivia.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,

From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,

And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,

Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

TO GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;

The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γίγλυμος and ἰδω.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder's Elements of Speech.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. [ginglime, French.] A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Whistman.

GINNET. n. f. [γίνω.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe. It never grows to any great size, and is of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromack smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromack, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China; and there is of it in the same latitudes in America. The Chinese value this root so highly, that it sells with them for three times its weight in silver. The Asiatics in general think the ginseng almost an universal medicine. The virtues most generally believed to be in it are those of a restorative, and a cordial. The European physicians esteem it a good medicine in convulsions, vertigoes, and all nervous complaints; and recommend it as one of the best restoratives known. Hill.

TO GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

I, near yon stile, three fallow gyffies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A sigil in this hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth's Dispensat.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gyffy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:

The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GIR'ASOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]

1. The herb turnfol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded, or girt. [gýrðan, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac. x. 25.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulliver.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 3.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms

Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milt. P. Lost.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,

And, at the head of our remaining troops,

Attack the foe: Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,

When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And in reguerdon of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakesp. H. VI.

The son appear'd,

Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with filk. Ezek. xvi. 10.

Typhonne there keeps the ward,

Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,

Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryd.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,

To gird their waist: vain covering, if to hide

Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakesp.

8. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs

His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Paradise Regain'd.

9. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyseian isle,

Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham

Hid Amalthea, and her florid son

Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milt. P. L.

To GIRD. v. n. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly.
This word is now seldom used.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:

For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakesp. H. VI.

They give satisfaction to his mind, and his conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson, Sermon 2.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman's Winter Evening Con.

GIRDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,

These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Blackm. Creation.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gýrðel, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,

With a thousand fragrant posies;

A cap of flowers, and a girdle,

Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,

On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from χόρη, of the same signification; Minshew from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from berlodes, Welsh, from which, says he,
barlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.

And let it not displease thee, good Bianca;

For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakespeare.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,

Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop

To the low mimic follies of a farce,

As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Roscommon.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;

But oh, a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suited a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Carew.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIRN. v. n. Seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person.

GIRROCK. n. f. A kind of fish. Diſt.

GIRT. part. pass. [from To gird.]

To GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Wise man's Surgery.

GIRTH. n. f. [from gird.]

1. The band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;

For low on the ground, woe for his sake,

The law is found. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,

Along the high celestial road;

The steed oppress'd, would break his girth,

To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.

Mordanto gallops on alone;

The roads are with his foll'wers strown;

This breaks a girth, and that a bone. Swift.

2. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Freeholder.

To GIVE. v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;

The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hooke's Rom. Hist.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, biscuit, sweetmeats, and salt. Bacon's Natural History.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,

Like season'd timber, never gives;

But though the whole world turn to coal,

Then chiefly lives. Herbert.

Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw malt. Mortimer.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock, Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground,

Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;

Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel's C. War.

4. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayw.

5. To GIVE in to. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medallists: the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind. Locke on Education.

7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker, b. iii.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker, b. v.

Give not o'er so: to him again; intreat him,

Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;

You are too cold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon's Apophthegms.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,

Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame

Only to put it out again?

And must we now give o'er,

And only end where we begun?

In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. AEs viii. 9.

Julius Cæsar laid asleep Pompey's preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not. Bacon, Essay 60.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

9. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,

Like moles within us, heave and cast about:

And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;

They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,

That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

10. To GIVE way. To yield; not to resist; to make room for. Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way. Collier.

Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way;

The mists flew upward, and dissolv'd in day. Dryd. Æn.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows,

Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden's Æn.

GIVER. n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford

Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

By thee how fairly is the giver now

Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost

Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;

The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;

Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIZZARD. n. f. [gizier, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. More.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Ray.

Flutt'ring there they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own;

By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind; as, he frets his gizzard, he harrasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,

Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;

Which puts the overheated sots

In fevers still. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. II.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that the blood in their veins is not half so dear to them as the treasure they have in their coffers. L'Estrange.

GLA'BRITY. n. f. [from glaber, Latin.] Smoothness; baldness. Diſt.

GLA'CIAL. adj. [glacial, French; glacialis, Latin.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLA'CIATE. v. n. [glacies, Latin; glacer, French.] To turn into ice.

GLACIA'TION. n. f. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. I.

GLACIS. n. f. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD. adj. [glæb, Saxon; glad, Danish.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

He will be glad in his heart.

Ex. iv. 14.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Is. xxxv.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness: perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with, when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He hath an uncle in Messina will be very much glad of it. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Prov.

If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood;

The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,

His fauchion drew, Dryden's Æn.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

4. Pleasing; exhilarating.

Her conversation

More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney, b. i.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:

Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope's Messiah.

To GLAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy North; from frost-bound Atlas' hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.
It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Otway.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.
If justice Philips' costive head
Some frigid rhymes disburfes,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.
To GLA'DDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.
Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison's Cato.
A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her,
when she does not attend to it. Addison's Spectator.
GLA'DDER. n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.
Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddesses. Dryden.
GLADE. n. f. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucus. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. II.
Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Hubbard's Tale.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
For noonday's heat are closer harbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd. Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.
By the heroes armed shades,
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife! Pope's St. Cecil.
GLA'DEN. } n. f. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.] Swordgrafs: a GLA'DER. } general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.
GLA'DFULNESS. n. f. [glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness.
And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.
GLADIA'TOR. n. f. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer;
a prizefighter.
Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
GLA'DLY. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.
For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare's King Lear.
You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.
GLA'DNESS. n. f. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.
By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore. Dryden.
GLA'DSOME. adj. [from glad.]
1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen.
The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend:
Delight to hover near. Dryden's Æn. b. iv.
2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.
Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.
GLA'DSOMELY. adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.
GLA'DSOMNESS. n. f. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showiness; delight.
GLAIRE. n. f. [glær, Saxon, amber; glar, Danish, glass; glaire,
French; glareæ, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.
Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water.
Peacham on Drawing.
2. A kind of halbert.
To GLAIRE. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.
GLANCE. n. f. [glantz, German, glitter.]
1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milt. Parad. Lost.
2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon's Nat. History.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Fai. Queen.
When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.
2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shakespeare.
3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.
4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.
O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again, and kiss. Suckling.
Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope's Dunciad.
The cooing dove
Flies thick in am'rous chace, and wanton rolls
The glancing eye, and turns the changeful scene. Thomson.
5. To censure by oblique hints.
How can'st thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Shakespeare.
Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon, Essay 23.
I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addis. Spect.
It was objected against him that he had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.
To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shak. Mer. of Ven.
GLA'NCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill on Providence.
GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
I observed the abscess to have begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiseman's Surgery.
The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm. Creation.
GLA'NDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse, is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green or black. Farrier's Dict.

His horse is possest with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

GLANDIFEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GLANDULE. n. f. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULOSITY. n. f. [from glandulosus.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

There are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatick, and all the diseases thereon dependant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To GLARE. v. n. [glæren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of fôul Alecto flame. Fairfax, b. ii.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Æn.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addis.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Avaunt, and quit my sight! let the earth hide thee!
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou do'st glare with. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a furlly stand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryd. Fables.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryd. Fab.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rock of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milt. Parad. Lost.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glaireux, Fr. glareosus, Latin, from glaire.]

Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing very shocking: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glær, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezon imagines from glås, British, green. In Erse it is called klân, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of granadoes rain, by sudden burst

Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adust, Phillips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shews me many more, Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden's Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, besure
'Tis time to shun it. Phillips.

6. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

7. A perspective glass.

Like those who have survey'd the moon by glasses, I can only tell of a new and shining world above us; but not relate the riches and glories of the place, Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shakesp. King Lear.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. [Sidney, b. ii.]

2. To case in glass,

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were
glass'd,
Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakesp.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glass'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, superserviceable, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion,

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.] Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Payia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; and is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon's Natural History.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown; and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,

Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:

His glassy essence, like an angry ape,

Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,

As makes the angels weep. Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,

That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shak. Ham.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.

A hundred sweep,

With stretching oars, the glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR, which see.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring, and in no other respect differs from the common hawthorn. Miller.

GLAUcoma. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucoma, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh. Glaiue is Erse for a broad sword.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,

But each a glave had pendant by his side. Fairfax, b. i.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,

Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudibras, p. iii.

TO GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; ghpan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous on the one hand as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician is on the other. L'Estrange's Fables.

TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâse, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,

Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shakesp. R. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. ii. c. 6.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresny.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Mixon's Mech. Exer.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,

And ginging fathes on the penthouse sound. Gay's Trivia.

GLEAD. n. f. A buzzard hawk; a kite. It retains that name in Scotland.

GLEAM. n. f. [gelioma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen

Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;

And conquerors bedecked with his green,

Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste

His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

As I bent down to look just opposite,

A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,

Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;

Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryd. Aurengz.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun

Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,

And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,

Around the dreary coast,

But dreadful gleams,

Fires that glow,

Shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.

TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

Observant of approaching day,

The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,

At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomf. Summer.

Ye gleamings of departed peace

Shine out your last. Thomson's Spring.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,

And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,

Or gleam in lengthen'd vista's through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,

Swift through the town the warrior bends his way: Pope.

TO GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,

To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,

If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shakesp. Hamlet.

That goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,

Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

Judg. xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,

When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;

As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear

Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear, } Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;

The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:

He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

GLE'ANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,

Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomf. Autumn.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke.

GLE'ANING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury's Sermons.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,

With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milt.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping

Sleeping vegetables lie,

'Till the glad fummons of a genial ray

Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning:

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds

In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,

With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE. n. f. [glibaghe, Saxon.] A kite.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deutr.

GLEE. n. f. [glegge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,

Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foreflow not to baigne them with perfume. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

And his sportive limbs,

This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Their frolics play. Thomson's Spring.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!

No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay's Pastorals.

GLEED. n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLE'FUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast? Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. f. [glegge, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

To GLEEK. v. a. [glegman, in Saxon, is a mimick or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shakefp. Midf. Night's Dream.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimickry or drollery.

To GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,

Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from gliban, Saxon, to run softly.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a fore.

There then lay a hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wifeman's Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours may be raised by the sun in such quantities as are sufficient to make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the sides of the more mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the rocky caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow and stony, afford them a basin. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLE'ETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting. Wifeman.

GLEN. n. f. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,

And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen. Spenser.

GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from λείος. Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art

To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend;

I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;

Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:

And then, to make them pass the glibber,

Revis'd by Tibbald, Moore, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;

Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB. n. f.

They have another custom from the Scythians, the wearing of mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see;

To bring false generations; they are coheirs,

And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

GLI'BLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. Government of the Tongue.

GLI'BNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold

The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [gliban, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty vallies, glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax, b. iii.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden's Æn.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryden's Æn.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?

In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass gently and without tumult.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden's Æn.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I

Glide thither in a day? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryd. Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly

Seeing Orlando it unlink'd itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLI'DER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;

Hey ho the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser's Pastoral.

GLIKE. n. f. [glig, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A sneer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Now where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glikes?

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

To GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakef.

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her. Milton.

See't thou yon' dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
The sacred influence

Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray
Shot glimm'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.
Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies. Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.
On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick: talc, catilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milt. Par. Lost.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or, which our shortighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton's P. Lost.
My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryd. Fables.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If hap'ly be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milt. Par. Lost.
Some he punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might from thence have a taste or glimpse of his present justice.

Hakewill on Providence.

A man, used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden's Virgil.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

There is no man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

TO GLISTEN. v. n. [glittan, German.] To shine; to sparkle with light.

The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson's Winter.

The ladies eyes glistened with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

TO GLISTER. v. n. [glittan, German; glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser on Ireland.

How he glisters

Through my dark rust! And how his piety Does my deeds make the blacker! Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,

Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glis'tring coach. Shakespeare.
All that glisters is not gold. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Pen. John's Underwoods.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. 1 Mac. vi. 39.

Glister'd in one snake, and into fraud
Led Eve, our credulous mother, to the tree
Of prohibition. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLISTER. n. f. [Properly written cyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 2.

TO GLITTER. v. n. [glitzan, Saxon]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
Before the battle joins, from afar

The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryden's Virg.
Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy conqu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

Let them on the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it.
Decay of Piety.

GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show;
splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
A man has reason not to flourish too much upon the glitter of his fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it.
Collier on Pride.

GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.] With shining lustre.

TO GLOAR. v. a. [gloeren, Dutch.]

1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, what a gloarand quean.

TO GLOAT. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for glar.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,
And her deluding eyes to gloat for you. Rowe's Ja. Shore.

GLOBARD. n. f. [from glow.] A glow-worm.

GLOBATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe;
spherical; spheroidal.

GLOBE. n. f. [globe, French; globus, Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body; a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give this dominion, it is plain he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleaveland.

These are the stars,

But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find
Such figures there as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright imblazoning, and horrent arms. Milton.

GLOBE Amaranth, or everlasting flower. n. f. [amaranthoides,
The flowers are small, and cut into four segments, which are collected into squamose heads: from each of these scales is produced a single flower: the ovary in the bottom of the flower becomes a roundish crooked seed, contained in a thin pellicule or skin. Miller.

GLOBE Daisy. n. f. A kind of flower.

GLOBE

G L O

GLOBE Fish. n. f. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE Ranunculus. n. f. [helleboro-ranunculus.]

It hath single circumscribed leaves, like the ranunculus: the cup of the flower consists of five small leaves of the same colour with the flower. Miller.

GLOBE Thistle. n. f.

It hath the whole appearance of a thistle: the leaves are produced alternately: the florets consist of one leaf, which is divided into five segments, and is hollow, and each single floret has a scaly cup: the flowers are collected into a spherical head, which has the common cup or covering. Miller.

GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which

All thy dominion, Adam, is no more

Than what this garden is to all the earth,

And all the sea; from one entire globose

Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Then form'd the moon

Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton's Par. Lost.

GLOBO'SITY. n. f. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose; when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far

Than all this globose earth in plain outspread,

Such are the courts of God!

Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge

Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;

Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,

Singing the air. Phillips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] In form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. i. c. 2.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Lat. globulaire, Fr.] A flosculous flower, consisting of many florets, which are divided into several segments, and have one lip. Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, Fr. globulus, Lat.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure, as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Newton's Opt.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastick, and will break: the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot possibly fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 832.

GLOMEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomanz, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

This the seat,

That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,

Wholsome, and cool, and mild; but with black air

Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom. Milton.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,

Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

TO GLOOM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.

His glitt'ring armour made

A little glooming light much like a shade. Fairy Queen.

G L O

Scarcely had Phœbus in the glooming East

Yet harnessed his fiery footed team. Spenser.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

3. To be melancholy; to be sullen.

GLOOMILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dismally.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks!

Dryden.

Gloomily retir'd

The villain spider lives. Thomson's Summer.

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and unconvertible. Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 179.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon. Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope's Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours.

Old respect,

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son now captive, hither hath inform'd

Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age

Came lagging after. Milton's Agonistes.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, Fr. from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

TO GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakesp. K. John.

Justice is their virtue: that alone

Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker, b. v.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakesp. Henry VI.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxvi. 9.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall

Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory or dignity.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. Jo xiii. 32.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLO'RIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon, Essay 55.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent.

Let

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison's Cato.
GLO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true criticks dare not mend. Pope.

GLO'RY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin. Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, gl're]

1. Praise paid in adoration. Luke ii. 14.
Glory to God in the highest.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.
Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to thy glory. Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity. Sidney.
Think it no glory to swell in tyranny.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak. H. VI.
And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax, b. i.
Can we imagine that either the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

4. Splendour; magnificence.
Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.
Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope's Winter.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And faints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspet.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.
By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

8. Generous pride.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney, b. ii.

TO GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney, b. ii.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakefp.
Your glorying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addis. Cato.

This title is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 1.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atter.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

TO GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colloque. Hanmer. See TO GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.
Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation.
Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney, b. ii.
It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
The common gloss

Of theologians. Milton.

3. Superficial lustre.
His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Fai. Queen.
You are a sectary,

That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakefp.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss. Shakefp.
The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,

Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads, b. xviii.
It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South's Sermons.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 412.

TO GLOSS. v. n. [gloser, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To comment.
Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd. Fables.

2. To make fly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

TO GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.
No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare's Henry V.
In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.
Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.
Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?

You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Phillips's Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.
But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.
GLOSSA'TOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.
 The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.
GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]
 1. A scholiast; a commentator.
 2. A polisher.
GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.
 Those grains were as like little cubes as if they had been made by a skilful jeweller, and their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.
GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφῶ.] A scholiast; a commentator.
GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφῶ.] The writing of commentaries.
GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.
 There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.
 The rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.
 His surcoat was a bearskin on his back;
 His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.
 Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
 For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden's Virgil.
GLOVE. n. f. [glofe, Saxon, from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.
 Like an uproar in a town,
 Before them every thing went down;
 They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
 For haste some left their masks behind,
 Some could not stay their gloves to find. Drayton.
 White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
 A wreath of laurel. Dryden.
TO GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.
 My limbs,
 Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
 Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
 A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
 Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
 The next he preys on is her palm,
 That alm'nier of transpiring balm;
 So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
 Tender as 'twere a jelly glow'd. Cleaveland.
GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.
 Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife?
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
TO GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.
 She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
 From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
 Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.
Glouting with sullen spight, the fury shook
 Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.
TO GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]
 1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.
 But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
 But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
 I will reveal what ye so much desire. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 His goodly eyes,
 That o'er the files and musters of the war
 Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopat.
 Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.
 Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
 With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt. Par. L.
 2. To burn with vehement heat.
 Nor would you find it easy to compose
 The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
 The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addis. Ovid.
 How op'ning heav'ns their happy regions show,
 And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.
 Fires that glow,
 Shrieks of woe. Pope.
 3. To feel heat of body.
 Did not his temples glow
 In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addis. Cato.
 The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.
 4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.
 With smile that glow'd
 Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.
 A malicious joy,
 Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
 A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
 From the mingled strength of shade and light;
 A new creation rises to my sight;
 Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
 So warm with life his blended colours glow,
 Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.
 Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.
 Fair ideas flow,
 Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.
 Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
 With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
 Can move the god. Pope.
 Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
 And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.
 Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.
 From her naked limbs of glowing white,
 In folds loose floating, fell the fainter lawn. Thomson.
 5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.
 You strive in vain
 To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
 The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.
 Forc'd compliments and formal bows
 Will shew thee just above neglect;
 The fire with which thy lover glows,
 Will settle into cold respect. Prior.
 Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
 To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.
 Let the gay conscience of a life well spent
 Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.
 With furies surrounded,
 Despairing, confounded,
 He trembles, he glows,
 Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.
 So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
 For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.
 To praise is always hard,
 When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.
 6. To rage or burn as a passion.
 A fire which every windy passion blows;
 With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.
 When crept into aged veins,
 Love slowly burns, and long remains;
 It glows, and with a sullen heat,
 Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.
TO GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.
 On each side her
 Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids;
 With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
 To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakefp.
GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Shining heat.
 2. Vehemence of passion.
 3. Brightness or vividness of colour.
 The pale complexion of true love;
 And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.
 A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
 Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope, Epistle iv.
GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.
 The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
 And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
 And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.
 The glowworm shews the matten to be near;
 And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon's Natural History.
 The man, who first upon the ground
 A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
 A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
 For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
 He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
 Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.
TO GLOZE. v. n. [gleran, Saxon.]
 1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.
 Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
 And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
 So glow'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
 Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milt. Par. Lost.
 A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.
 Now for a glozing speech;
 Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Phillips.
 2. To comment. This should be glose.
 Which Salique land the French unjustly glose
 To be the realm of France. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney, b. i.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a fort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee. Shakesp. H. VI.
Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together. Ecclus. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange, Fable 126.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson's Sermons.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.
I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUE-BOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUE-ER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Lat. to swallow; γλῦζω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'I'll cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dry.
No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcase glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden's State of Innocence.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbuthnot's Art of Polite Lying.

5. To saturate.

The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton's Par. Lost.
Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange, Fable 11.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward's Natural History.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutinex, French, from gluten, Latin.] Gluey; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon's Natural History, No. 900.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glouton, French, from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
When the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught. Prior.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glutinous maws. Shakesp.
The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Thou well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton's Par. Lost.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, Fr. from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton's Parad. Reg.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juven.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbuthnot.

GLUTY. adj. [from glue.]

2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phænomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glyns under the mountains foot. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Hung down his head, and wish'd for night,
When he beheld twelve suns for one
Going about the world, and giving light. Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,
As if they had been there as servants set,
To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,
And not pursue, but wait on his retreat. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

Not turning them going, 'till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of, and so leading them by your answers into farther questions. Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as the banks of that river.
Arbutnot on Coins.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you

- you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot. Swift's Directions to the Footman.
- Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brads, rather than return empty. Swift.

Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value. Locke.
27. To move by mechanism.
This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that, when he is dead, there be chosen a pope of fresh years. Bacon's Holy War.
Clocks will go as they are set; but man,
Irregular man's never constant, never certain. Otway.
'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own. Pope's Ess. on Crit.
28. To be in motion from whatever cause.
The weyward sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Clipt and washed money goes about, when the entire and weighty lies hoarded up. Waller.
29. To move in any direction.
Doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt; on which, if a man lean, it will go into his hand and pierce it. 2 Kings xviii. 21.
Shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees? 2 Kings xx. 9.
30. To flow; to pass; to have a course.
The god I am, whose yellow water flows
Around these fields, and fattens as it goes, Tyber my name. Dryden's Æn.
31. To have any tendency.
Athenians, know
Against right reason all your counsels go;
This is not fair, nor profitable that,
Nor t'other question proper for debate. Dryden's Pers.
32. To be in a state of compact or partnership.
As a lion was bestriding an ox that he had newly plucked down, a robber passing by cried out to him, half shares: you should go your snip, says the lion, if you were not so forward to be your own carver. L'Estrange.
There was a hunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox, and they were to go equal shares in the booty. L'Estrange.
33. To be regulated by any method; to proceed upon principles.
Where the multitude beareth sway, laws that shall tend to the preservation of that state must make common smaller offices to go by lot, for fear of strife and divisions likely to arise. Hook.
We are to go by another measure. Sprat's Sermons.
The principles I there went on, I see no reason to alter. Loc.
The reasons that they went upon were very specious and probable. Bentley's Sermons.
34. To

34. To be pregnant.

Great bellied women,
That had not half a week to go. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
The fruit she goes with,
I pray that it good time and life may find. Shakefp. H. VIII.
Of living creatures some are a longer time in the womb, and some shorter: women go commonly nine months, the cow and the ewe about six months. Bacon's Nat. History.
Some do go with their young the sixth part of a year, or two over or under, that is, about six or nine weeks;
and the whelps of these see not 'till twelve days. Brown.

And now with second hopes she goes,
And calls Lucina to her throws. Milton.

35. To pass; not to remain.

She began to afflict him, and his strength went from him. Judg. xvi. 19.
When our merchants have brought them, if our commodities will not be enough, our money must go to pay for them. Locke.

36. To pass; not to be retained.

Then he lets me go,
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Let go the hand of that arch heretick. Shakefp. K. John.

37. To be expended.

Scholars are close and frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.
Pelton on the Classics.

38. To be in order of time or place.

We must enquire farther what is the connexion of that sentence with those that go before it, and those which follow
it. Watts's Logick.

39. To reach or be extended to any degree.

Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience. Locke.

40. To extend to consequences.

It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way barely to permit them. L'Estrange.

41. To reach by effects.

Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could do now. Wilkins.

42. To extend in meaning.

His amorous expressions go no further than virtue may allow. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

43. To spread; to be dispersed; to reach farther.

Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut, to make it farther go. Tate's Juven. Sat.

44. To have influence; to be of weight.

I had another reason to decline it, that ever uses to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments; which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or no. Temple.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put any thing to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection. L'Estr.

Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander. Swift.

45. To be rated one with another; to be considered with regard to greater or less worth.

I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough. Arbuthnot.

46. To contribute; to conduce; to concur.

The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that, if they were used inwards, they would kill those that use them. Bacon's Natural History.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making one part of their lines. Glanv. Sceps. c. 8.

There goes a great many qualifications to the completing this relation: there is no small share of honour and conscience and sufficiency required. Collier of Friendship.

I had some thoughts of giving the sex their revenge, by laying together the many vicious characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions.
Addison's Spectator, No. 211.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go toward acquiring those demonstrations of publick esteem and love. Swift to Pope.

47. To fall out, or terminate; to succeed.

Your strong possession much more than your right,
Or else it must go wrong with you and me. Shakefp. K. John.
Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
P' th' boldness of your speech. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee. Tob. x. 8.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, it would go on the other side. Bacon's Collection of Good and Evil.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him. South's Sermons.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily foreseeing how things would go, went over, like many others, to the prince. Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. Watts's Logick.

48. To be in any state. This sense is impersonal.

It shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle. Job xx.
He called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house. 1 Chr. vii. 23.

49. To proceed in train or consequence.

How goes the night, boy?
—The moon is down: I have not heard the clock;
And she goes down at twelve.
I take't 'tis later, fir. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I had hope,
When violence was ceas'd, and war on earth,
All would have then gone well. Milton.
Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in one constant, equal, uniform course. Locke.

50. To Go about. To attempt; to endeavour; to set one's self to any business.

O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I lost him; but so found, as well I saw
He could not lose himself, but went about
His father's business. Paradise Regain'd, b. ii.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, break off their ill customs, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South's Sermons.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

51. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numb. v. 12.

52. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakespeare.

53. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come your tardy son to chide,
That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command? Sh. Hamlet.
So much the more our carver's excellent,
Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her
As she liv'd now. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
What's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakespeare.

54. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever
Goes by the worse, whatever be her cause. Milt. Agonistes.
He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estrange.

55. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.

56. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not re-jected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift on the present State of Affairs.

57. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Pf.

58. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John x. 9.

59. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to de cease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arriv'd:
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakefp. Macbeth.
In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler, No. 86.

60. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakefp. H. IV.

61. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,

Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would

Go on upon the gods.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

62. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story.

Sidney, b. ii.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleas'd with it, whoever is the instrument.

Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motions: if they go on, the only poltice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

Temple.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable.

Addis. Spect.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 164.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the expectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest.

Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it.

Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expletives.

Swift.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

Berkley.

63. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over.

Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money.

Swift.

64. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have prick'd me: there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

65. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,

With titles blown from adulation? Shakespeare's Henry V.

Spirit of wine burn'd 'till it go out of itself, will burn no more.

Bacon's Natural History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails.

Temp.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;

And all her early fires again go out.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered.

Collier of Friendship.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,

And life itself goes out at thy displeasure.

Addison's Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might,

Art after art goes out, and all is night.

Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

66. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it.

Sidney, b. ii.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there.

Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands.

Bacon, Essay 21.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking.

Clarend.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it.

South's Sermons.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money, in order to go through their part of the expence.

Addison on the War.

67. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation.

Arbuthnot.

68. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression.

Go to. interject. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son

Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might

In medicine.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. Stan. 43.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow;

Let me be clear of thee.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these:

Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

Rowe.

Go-by. n. f. Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.

Collier on Pride.

Go-CART. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in

Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,

When members knit, and legs grow stronger,

Make use of such machine no longer.

Prior.

GOAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Of in his harden'd hand a goad he bears.

Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with a goad.

2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous

Is that temptation, that doth goad us on

To sin in loving virtue.

Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,

Which lay nice manners by, I put you to

The use of your own virtues.

Shak. All's well that ends well.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,

Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee.

Dryden's Lucret.

GOAL. n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,

Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal

With rapid wheels.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

And the slope sun his upward beam

Shoots against the dusky pole,

Pacing toward the other goal.

Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,

The youthful charioteers with heaving heart

Rush to the race?

Dryden's Virg. Georg.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end.

Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

Each individual seeks a sev'ral goal;

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole.

Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,

Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;

Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;

'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

Pope's Essay on Man.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

GOAR. n. f. [goror, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloath to strengthen it.

Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [gat, Saxon and Scottish.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper-mills or bubble-shells upon goats, eagles, or dolphins.

Peacham on Drawing.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,

The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid

With heaven, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

Creech.

GOATBEARD. n. f. [goat and beard.]

It is a plant with a semisflosculous flower, consisting of many half florets: these with the embryos are included in one common many leaved flower-cup, not scaly, but the segments are stretched out above the florets: the embryos afterward become oblong seeds inclosed in coats, and have a thick down like a beard adhering to them.

Miller.

GOATSBREAD. The same with GOATSBEARD, which see.

GOATCHAFFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle.

Bailey.

GOATHERD. n. f. [gat and hyrd, Saxon, a feeder or tender.]

One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,

That sits on yonder bank,

Whose straying herd themselves doth shrowd

Among the bushes rank?

Spenser's Pastorals.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack

Wotton.

GOATMARJORAM. n. f. The same with GOATSBEARD, which see.

GOATMILK. n. f. [goat and milk.]

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatmilk may be necessary.

Wifeman's Surgery.

GOATMILKER. n. f. [goat and mi. ker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats.

Bailey.

GOATS Rue. n. f. [galega.]

It hath a perennial root: the leaves grow by pairs, fastened to a mid-rib, terminating in an odd lobe: the flower is of the papilionaceous kind, consisting of a standard, the wings, and the keel: the pointal becomes a long taper pod, which is filled with oblong kidney-shaped seeds. This plant is propagated for medicinal use.

Miller.

Goat's rue is a native of Italy, and some parts of Spain, where it has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled, and make a kind of tea of it; but with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.]

They wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, and tormented. Hebr. ii. 37.

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;

With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope's Odyssey.

GOATS-THORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.]

It hath a papilaceous flower, out of which empalement arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a bicausular pod filled with kidney-shaped seeds: the leaves grow by pairs on a middle rib, which always end in a thorn. Tournefort says the gum adragant, or dragon, is produced in Crete. Miller.

GOATISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any qualities: as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shak. King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Atheism.

GOB. n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

GOBBET. n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd out of her filthy maw
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of fish and gobbets raw. Fairy Queen.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd

With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shakes. H. VI.

The cooks, slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prog of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys's Travels.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd

With purple wine and crudd'd gore confus'd. Addison.

To GOBBET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together. L'Estrange, Fable 4.

To GOBBLE. v. a. [gobber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Est.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,

Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

GOBBLER. n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GOBETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

GOBLET. n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakes. Rich. II.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;

But free from surfeits our repose is found. Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught;

Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

GOBLIN. n. f. [French; goblin, which Spenser has once retained, writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eilff Uylhon are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Goboldi, from which goblin might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,

Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell? Shak.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,

Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame

The wicked gobbelines in bloody field;

But Elfant was of most renowned fame,

Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews

With aged cramps. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,

While well attested, and as well believ'd,

Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson's Winter.

GOD. n. f. [god, Saxon, which like life signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John iv. 24.

God above

Deal between thee and me: for ever now

I put myself to thy direction. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. i.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 10.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,

They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways

The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas;

And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,

Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryd.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil. iii.

I am not Licio,

Nor a musician as I seem to be;

But one that scorns to live in this disguise,

For such a one as leaves a gentleman,

And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare.

To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,

Lov'd me above the measure of a father;

Nay, godded me, indeed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

GO'DCHILD. n. f. [god and child] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER. n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DDESS. n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddesses, hear a father! Shakes.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,

Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:

My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakespeare.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,

Built to the gracious goddess's Clemency;

But reverence thou the pow'r. Dryden's Fables.

From his seat the goddess born arose,

And thus undaunted spoke: Dryden's Fables.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison's Freeholder, N°. 21.

Modesty with-held the goddess' train. Pope's Odyssey.

GO'DDESS-LIKE. adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard;

A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.

GO'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon's Henry VII.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD. n. f. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature.

Be content;

Your low laid son our godhead will uplift. Shakesp. Cymbel.

At the holy mount

Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne

Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,

The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

So may thy godhead be confest,

So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Adoring first the genius of the place,

The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryd. Æn.

GO'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That godless crew

Rebellious. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 49.

For

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment.

Dryden.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.

Milt. Par. Lost.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,

How best the mighty work he might begin

Of favour to mankind, and which way first

Publish his godlike office now mature.

Paradise Regain'd.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind.

Locke.

GO'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,

Whose humble statues are content with brass.

Dryd. Juven.

GO'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God.

Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

GO'DLY. adj. [from god.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life.

Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men.

Pf. xii. 1.

GO'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution.

Hooker, b. v.

GO'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,

I crave your godlyhead to assuage

The rancorous rigour of his might.

Spenser.

GO'DMOTHER. n. f. [god and mother.] A woman who has become sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DSHIP. n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity.

Discouraging largely on this theme,

O'er hills and dales their godships came.

Prior.

GO'DSON. n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father named? your Edgar?

Shakesp. K. Lear.

GO'DWARD. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hac Arethusa tenus, for haetenus Arethusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward.

2 Cor.

GO'DWIT. n. f. [god, good, and wita, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board.

Cowley.

GO'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A

GO'DYIELD. } term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,

How you should bid godyield us for your pains,

And thank us for your trouble.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [goler, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,

Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go set;

The goeler and younger, the better I love;

Well gutted and pared, the better they prove.

Tuff. Husb.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,

Myself by with a needle, that I might prick

The goer back.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Such a man

Might be a copy to these younger times;

Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them

But goers backward.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me.

Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer.

Wotton.

To GO'GGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,

To be seen by her in such a place,

Which made him hang his head, and scowl,

And wink and goggle like an owl.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want.

Dryd.

GO'GGLE-EYED. adj. [reegl egen, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

GO'ING. n. f. [from going.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,

No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,

Then comes the time, who lives to see't,

That going shall be us'd with feet.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going.

Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. iii. c. 3.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes

Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound.

Milt. P. Lost.

GOLA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM, which see.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show.

Spekt.

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money.

Peacham on Drawing.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is seldom found pure, but has almost constantly silver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold dust, or native gold, in small masses, is mixed among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain.

Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, plianthness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow.

Bacon's Nat. History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed.

Shakesp. Rich. III.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil.

Locke.

The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,

He sees now vainly make to his retreat.

Dryd. Tyran. Love.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive

The sooner to effect what I intended.

Thou, that so stoutly hast resisted me,

Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;

For I have bought it with an hundred blows.

Shakesp. H. VI.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,

And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold.

Shakespeare.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσὴ ἀφροδίτη; and animamq; morefque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp of fame.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum, ]

It hath a flower of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which becomes a turbinated fruit, having one cell, in which is included an oblong seed, and two empty cells at the point.

Miller.

GO'LDBEATER. n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat of foliate gold so as to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest coined gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition.

Boyle.

This gilder was a goldbeater.

Pope.

GO'LDBEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice.

Quincy.

When your gilliflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife or lancet at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

GO'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,

Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first.

Shakesp. Macb.

G O L

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain. Shakesf. R. III.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakespeare.
'Tis better to be lowly born,

And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crasshaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
Howe'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe's Royal Conv.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glos,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakespeare's Macbeth:
That verse which they commonly call golden, has two sub-stantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts's Logick.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.
Shakespeare's As you like it.

GO'LDEN Saxifrage. n. f. [chrysosplenium, ]

It hath a perennial fibrose root: the flowercup is divided into four parts: the flower has no visible petals, but eight stamina, or threads, which surround the ovary: the pointal becomes a membranous vessel, which is forked and bivalve, inclosing many small seeds. It grows wild upon marshy soil, and in shady woods. Miller.

GO'LDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakespeare's As you like it.

GO'LDFINCH. n. f. [goldfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks,
Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GO'LDFINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

GO'LDHAMMER. n. f. A kind of bird. Diët.

GO'LDING. n. f. A sort of apple. Diët.

GO'LDNEY. n. f. A sort of fish, otherwise called GILTHEAD, which see. Diët.

GO'LDPLEASURE. n. f. An herb. Diët.

GO'LD SIZE. n. f. A glue of a golden colour; glue used by gilders.

The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Peacham on Drawing.

GO'LD SMITH. n. f. [gold and smith, Saxon.]

1. One who manufactures gold.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Shakespeare.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.

The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

GO'LDYLOCKS. n. f. [coma aurea, Latin.]

It hath a fibrose perennial root: its numerous leaves are produced alternately on every side the branches: the flowers are yellow, and produced either singly or in an umbel upon the tops of the branches. Miller.

GOLL. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence pealdan, to handle or manage.] Hands; paws;
claws. Used in contempt, and obsolete.

They set hands, and Mopsa put to her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the preheminance. Sidney, b. ii.

G O O

GOME. n. f. The black and oily greafe of a cart-wheel.

Bailey.

Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wisem.

GO'NDOLA. n. f. [gondole, French.] A boat much used in Venice; a small boat.

He saw did swim

Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondelay, bedecked trim

With boughs and arbours woven cunningly. Fairy Queen.

In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous

Jessica. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

As with gondola's and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice

Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLIER. n. f. [from gondola.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,

Transported with no worse nor better guard,

But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,

To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor. Shakesf. Othello.

GONE. part. preter. [from go. See To GO.] As,

I need not qualify these remarks with a supposition that I have gone upon through the whole course of my papers. Addis.

1. Advanced; forward in progress.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mort.

The observator is much the brisker of the two, and, I think, farther gone of late in lyes and impudence than his Presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.

He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister;
we are gone else. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

3. Past.

I'll tell the story of my life,

And the particular accidents gone by,

Since I came to this isle. Shakespeare's Tempest.

4. Lost; departed.

When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas. Acts xvi. 19:

Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone. Holder.

5. Dead; departed from life.

I mourn Adonis dead and gone. Oldham.

A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GO'NFALON. } n. f. [gonfanon, French; gunfana, Islandick, GO'NFANON. } from gunn, a battle, and fani, a flag. Mr. Lye.

An ensign; a standard.

Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanc'd,

Standards and gonfalons, 'twixt van and rear,

Stream in the air. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. v.

GONORRHOEA. n. f. [γόνος and ῥέω.] A morbid running of venereal hurts.

Rauty mummy or stone mummy grows on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhæas. Woodward on Fossils.

GOOD. adj. comp. better, superl. best. [gōd, Saxon; goed,
Dutch.]

1. Having such physical qualities as are expected or desired.

God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. Gen. i. 31.

Take ye good heed unto yourselves. Deutr. ii. 4.

A universe of death! which God by curse

Created evil; for evil only good. Milt. Paradise Lost.

Resolv'd

From an ill cause to draw a good effect. Dryden's Fables.

Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good. Spectat.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

We may as well pretend to obtain the good which we want without God's assistance, as to know what is good for us without his direction. Smalridge's Sermons.

Ah! ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,

Nor in the critick let the man be lost!

Good nature and good sense must ever join;

'To err is human, to forgive, divine. Pope's Ess. on Critic.

2. Proper; fit; convenient.

It is not good that the man should be alone. Gen. ii. 18.

We thought it good to be left at Athens alone. 1 Thef. iii. 1.

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state: amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon, Essay 53.

Let us, if you think good, give Martius leave to proceed in his discourse. Bacon's holy War.

He concluded, that it was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Suffex. Clarendon, b. viii.

That when they are certified of our mind, they may be of good comfort, and ever go cheerfully about their own affairs. 2 Mac. xi. 26.

Quietness of mind improves into cheerfulness, enough to make me just so good humoured as to wish that world well. Pope to Swift.

20. Considerable; not small though not very great.

A good while ago God made choice that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word. Acts xv. 7.

It seemeth the plant, having a great stalk and top, doth prey upon the grass a good way about, by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon's Natural History.

Mirtle and pomgranate, if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, will meet. Peacham on Drawing.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations before they fell down. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate. With breeding.

If the critick has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his railery. Addison's Guardian.

Mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding. Addison's Spectator.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good breeding. Swift.

22. Real; serious; earnest.

Love not in good earnest, nor no farther in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again. Shakespeare's As you like it.

23. Rich; of credit; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man: my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

24. Having moral qualities, such as are wished; virtuous.

For a good man some would even dare to die. Rom. v. 7.

The woman hath wrought a good work upon me. Matt.

Grant the bad what happiness they would,

One they must want, which is to pass for good. Pope.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being so turned in her, that where at first liking her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners. Sidney, b. ii.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will towards men. Lu. ii. 14.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin. Bacon's Ornament. Ration.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;

Good nature now and passion strive

Which of the two should be above,

And laws unto the other give.

Suckling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men. Decay of Piety.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,

'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,

'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd. Denb.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natured to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man. Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant world has thought otherwise. Dryd. Juven. Dedicat.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use. Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of mens proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution? Spratt's Sermons.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind. Calamy's Sermons.

How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,

And drive him from you with so stern an air. Addison. Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. 1 Sa. xxv. 15.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. Pf. lxxiii. 1.

You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you. 1 Thess. iii. 6.

This idea, thus made, and laid up for a pattern, must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination. Locke.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry. Often used ironically.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon, b. viii.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath and willing by good will, obeyed. Sidney, b. ii.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it. Temple.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies; And diligence shall give what age denies. Dryden's Fables.

31. In GOOD time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools. Collier on Human Reason.

32. In GOOD sooth. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my flames?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light. Shakesp.

33. GOOD [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given. Bacon's Henry VII.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dragoons, which were placed there to make good their retreat. Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then, no doubt, to make good that claim, we are proportionably obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to and become this household, and distinguish it from all others. Spratt's Sermons.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues;

As honour made him first the danger chuse,

So still he makes it good on virtue's score. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

34. GOOD [To make.] To perform; to confirm.

I farther will maintain

Upon his bad life to make all this good. Shakesp. Rich. II.

While she so far extends her grace,

She makes but good the promise of her face. Waller.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good. Smalridge.

35. GOOD [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another. L'Estr.

GOOD. n. f.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil.

I fear the emperor means no good to us. Shak. Tit. Andr.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me. Shak. Midsum. Night's Dream.

He wav'd indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Nature in man's heart her laws doth pen,

Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will. Davies.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil. Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,

And for the church's good defer thy own. Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them good,

As bodies perish through excess of blood. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force. Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd

Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature

Unto the good, not ruin of the state. Ben. Johnf. Catiline.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all. L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety.

Depart from evil, and do good. Pf. xxxiv. 14.

Empty of all good, wherein consists

Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milt. P. L.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum honestum ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight

For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,

Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good. Dryden.

5. GOOD placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See GOOD adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves. South's Sermons.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society. L'Estrange.

GOOD. adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. As GOOD. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side;

As good have grown there still a lifeless rib. Milton.

Says the cuckow to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons? L'Estrange.

GOOD. interjection. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

Good! my complexion! do'st thou think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? Shakespeare's As you like it.

GOOD-CONDITIONED. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon, at this time, dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned. Sharp's Surgery.

GOOD-NOW. interjection.

1. In good time; a la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of intreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now sit down, and tell me, he that knows,

Why this same watch? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

GO'ODLINESS. n. f. [from goodly.] Beauty; grace; elegance.

She sung this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes. Sidney.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye. Hooker, b. i.

GO'ODLY. adj. [from good.]

1. Beautiful; graceful; fine; splendid. Now little in use.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, wherewith his mind did deck his outward graces. Sidn.

A goodly city is this Antium. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Patience and sorrow strove

Which should express her goodliest: you have seen

Sunshine and rain at once. Her smiles and tears

Were like a wetter May. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Here from gracious England have I offer

Of goodly thousands. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

But he's something stain'd

With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou might'st call him A goodly person. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, and put them upon Jacob. Gen. xxvii. 15.

There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he. 1 Sa. ix. 2.

He had not, according to his promise to them in time of his distress, made them any recompence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the country by Roscetes in the former wars. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The goodliest man of men since born

His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve. Milton.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble song;

Fierce, goodly, valiant, beautiful and young. Waller:

Not long since walking in the field,

My nurse and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,

I would have pluck'd. Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view

In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:

O goodly order'd work! O power divine!

Of thee I am, and what I am is thine! Dryden's Innocence.

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,

Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;

Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,

But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind. Dryden's Fables.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,

Goodly and great he sails behind his link. Dryden.

3. Happy; desirable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see. Shak. Richard III.

GOO'DLY. adv. Excellently. Obsolete.

There Alma, like a virgin queen most bright,

Doth flourish in all beauty excellent;

And to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,

Atemper'd goodly well for health and for delight. F. Queen.

GOO'DLYHOOD. n. f. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

But mote thy goodlyhood forgive it me,

To meet which of the gods I shall thee name. Fai. Queen.

GOO'DMAN. n. f. [good and man.]

1. A slight appellation of civility: generally ironical.

Help ho! murther! murther!

—How now, what's the matter? part.

—With you, goodman boy, if you please: come, I'll flesh ye. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A rustick term of compliment; gaffer.

Are you my wife, and will not call me husband? My men should call me lord: I am your goodman. Shakespeare.

Nay, hear your goodman deliver. Shakesp. Hamlet.

But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,

And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn. Gay's Past. Old

Old goodman Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the trees has seen.

Swift.

Go'ODNESS. n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.

Sidney, b. ii.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.

Hooker.

All goodness

Is poison to thy stomach.

—Yes, that goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:

The goodness of your intercepted packets

You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Sh. H. VIII.

There's no goodness in thy face. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose.

Tillotson, Sermon 1.

All severally made him very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.

Clarendon, b. ii.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself: one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.

Locke.

GoODS. n. f. [from good.]

1. Moveables in a house.

That a writ be su'd against you,

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,

Cattle, and whatsoever.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Wares; freight; merchandize.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England.

Raleigh's Essays.

Sallee, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,

Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.

Waller.

GoO'DY. n. f. [corrupted from good wife.] A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;

Unto the king so rash ye may not go.

Hubbard's Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,

Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd. Gay's Pastorals.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her grogram gown.

Swift.

GOOSE. n. f. plural geese. [gor, Saxon; goes, Dutch; gawe, Erse, sing. gewey, plural.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced lown,

Where got'st thou that goose look?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten 'till lately.

Shakespeare.

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I'd drive ye cackling home to Comelot. Shakesp. King Lear.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan.

Peacham on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,

Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace. Dryd. Fables.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose.

Shakespeare.

Go'OSEBERRY. n. f. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.]

The leaves are lacinated or jagged: the whole plant is set with prickles: the fruit grows dispersedly upon the tree, having for the most part but one fruit upon a footstalk, which is of an oval or globular figure, containing many small seeds, surrounded by a pulpy substance. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The large manured gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry. 5. The large amber gooseberry. 6. The large green gooseberry. 7. The large red gooseberry. 8. The yellow-leaved gooseberry. 9. The striped-leaved gooseberry.

Miller.

August has upon his arm a basket of all manner of ripe fruits; as pears, plums, apples, gooseberries.

Peacham.

Upon a gooseberry bush a snail I found;

For always snails near sweetest fruit abound. Gay's Past.

Go'OSEFOOT. n. f. [chenopodium, ] Wild orach.

The seeds are single and globose in some species; but in others they are compressed: the cup of the flower is quinquefid: the leaves grow alternately upon the stalks between the seeds.

Miller.

Go'OSEGRASS. n. f. Clivers; an herb. See CLIVERS.

Goosegrass, or wild tanfy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

Go'RBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gormand's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

Go'RBELLED. adj. [from gorbelly.] Fat; bigbelled; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.

Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninepins.

Beaumont and Fletcher.

Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

GORE. n. f. [gone, Saxon; gor, Welsh, sanious matter.]

1. Blood.

A grievously wound,

From which forth gush'd a stream of gore blood thick,

That all her goodly garment stain'd around,

And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. F. Queen.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,

Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody fact

Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,

Rolling in dust and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood

Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood. Denham.

To GORE. v. a. [gebeþian, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear

For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakesp. R. II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;

Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar

Commission takes his brother swine to gore. Tate's Juven.

For arms his men long pikes and jav'lins bore,

And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryd.

2. To pierce with a horn.

His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson's Spring.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver.

Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakesp. Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,

He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Fa. Queen.

To GORGE. v. u. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,

Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth. Sh. Ro. and Jul.

Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full. Shakesp.

He that makes his generation messes,

To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.

I must therefore desire, that they will not gorge him either with nonsense or obscenity.

Addison's Guardian.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain

On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,

To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addis. Cats.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den. Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.

GORGEIOUS. adj. [gorgias, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace! Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

As full of spirit as the month of May,

And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayw.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,

Pours on her kings barbaric, pearl and gold. Milton.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,

The two contending princes make their way. Dryd. Virgil.

Go'RGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Wotton.

Go'RGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

Go'RGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a palsy fumbling on his gorget,

Shakes in and out the rivet. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

He

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,

To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johnf. Cat.

About his neck a threefold gorget,

As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

GO'RGON. n. f. [γοργών.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chimera's dire. Milton.

Why did'st thou not encounter man for man,

And try the virtue of that gorgon face

To stare me into stature. Dryden.

GO'RMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

To GO'RMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

2. A cat's tail on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL. n. f. [göder rpe, or God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον; göskel, skeal suach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun

Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a stedfast belief of the promises of the gospel! Bentley's Sermons.

2. Divinity; theology.

To GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gossellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gossell'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakesp.

GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wicklif, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gossellers have had their golden days,

Have troden down our holy Roman faith. Rowe's J. Shore.

GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of Autumn. Hanmer.

A lover may bestride the gossamour,

That idles in the wanton Summer air,

And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakesp. Rom. and Juliet.

Had'st thou been aught but gossamere, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,

Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg. Shakesp. King Lear.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,

Their harnesses of gossamere. Drayton's Nymphid.

The filmy gossamer now flits no more,

Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryd. Virgil.

GO'SSIP. n. f. [from gob and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me,

After so long grief such nativity:

—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tipling companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab,

And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakespeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,

And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,

The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

To GO'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me.

—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,

And, in the spiced Indian air by night,

Full often hath she gossipt by my side. Shakespeare.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feasts,

Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping. Shak. K. John.

GO'SSIPRED. n. f. [gossipry, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies on Ireland.

GO'STING. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

GOT. pret. [from the verb get.]

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,

Though foul Therfites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;

This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryd. Innocence.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward's Natural History.

GOT. part. pass of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Let him boast

His knowledge of good lost, and evil got. Milt. Par. Lost.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,

Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.

GO'TTEN. part. pass of get.

GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

2. An establishment of legal authority.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content

The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryd.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power. Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.

4. Regularity of behaviour.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain. Shakesf. Hen. IV.
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakesf. H. VI.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakesf.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god

Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government. Fairy Queen.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendious bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations. Pf. xxii. 28.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South's Sermons.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain. Shakesf. Othello.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltam will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shakesf. Henry VI.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth. Ja. iii. 4.

GOURD. n. f. [gouhorde, French.]

1. It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, of the expanded bell-shape, for the most part so deeply cut that it seems to consist of five distinct leaves: this, like the cucumber, has male and female flowers on the same plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped, and is commonly divided into six cells, in which are contained many flat oblong seeds. Miller.

But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,

Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice

To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Gourd seeds are used in medicine; and they abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the number of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions. Hill's Mat. Med.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French. Skinner.]

The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Hamner.

GOURDINESS. n. f. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey. Farrier's Dict.

GOURNET. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.

GOUT. n. f. [goutte, French.]

1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the slowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme. Arbuthnot on Diet.

One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather

Groan so in perplexity than be cur'd

By th' sure physician death. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

This very rev'rend lecher, quite worn out

With rheumatisms, and crippled with his gout,

Forgets what he in youthful times has done,

And swinges his own vices in his son. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A drop, [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

I see thee still,

And on the blade o' th' dudgeon gouts of blood,

Which was not so before. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

GOUT. n. f. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word.

The method which he has published will make these catalogues exceeding useful, and serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies. Woodward on Fossils.

GRADIENT. adj. [gradiens, Latin.] Walking; moving by steps.

Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive. Wilkins.

GRADUAL. adj. [graduel, French.] Proceeding by degrees;
advancing step by step; from one stage to another.

Nobler birth

Of creatures animate with gradual life,

Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man. Milton.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, 'till at length, by many steps and ascents, they come to be at greatest. South.

GRADUAL. n. f. [gradus, Latin.] An order of steps.

Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,

The pavement kiss'd, and thus the saint implor'd. Dryden.

GRADUALITY. n. f. [from gradual.] Regular progression.

This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.] By degrees; in regular progression.

When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton's Opt.

The Author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it. Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbutnot.

TO GRADUATE. v. a. [graduier, French; gradus, Latin.]

1. To dignify with a degree in the university.

John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did his prince good service. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a noise as if the terms of architraves, frizes, and cornices were enough to graduate a master of this art. Wotton's Architect.

2. To mark with degrees.

The places were marked where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers. Derham's Physico-Theology.

3. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals: a chemical term.

The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold. Boyle.

4. To heighten; to improve.

Not only vitriol is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyers advance and graduate their colours with salts. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

GRADUATE. n. f. [gradué, French, from gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academical degree.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,

And chuse a female doctor for the gout. Bramston.

GRADUA'TION. n. f. [graduation, French, from graduate.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.

The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oyl of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall. Brown's Vu. Err.

2. The act of conferring academical degrees.

GRAFF. n. f. [See GRAVE.] A ditch; a moat.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep. Clarendon, b. viii.

GRAFF. } n. f. [greffe, French.] A small branch inserted into

GRAFT. } the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels. Raleigh.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graft maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 475.

'Tis usual now an inmate graft to see

With insolence invade a foreign tree: Dryd. Virg. Georg.

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graft, it will help to heel the sooner. Mort.

Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,

And yields an offspring more than nature gives. Pope.

TO GRAFF. } v. a. [greffer, French.]

TO GRAFT. }

1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;

I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,

And graft you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

With his pruning hook d'sjoin

Unbearing branches from their head,

And graft more happy in their stead. Dryden.

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.

In March is good grafting the skilful do know,

So long as the wind in the East do not blow:

From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,

For grafting and cropping is very good time. Tusser's Husb.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit: whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

Now

Now let me graft my pears, and prune the vine. Dryden.

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again. Rom. xi. 23.

These are th' Italian names which fate will join

With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line. Dryden's Æn.

4. To fill with an adscititious branch.

We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not

Be grafted to your relish. Shakespeare's Coriolanus:

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;

Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shakefp. R. III.

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident grafted upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,

And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

- GRAFTER. n. f. [from graft or graft.] One who propagates fruit by grafting.

I am informed, by the trials of more than one of the most skilful and experienced grafters of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the infition is made. Evelyn.

- GRAIL. n. f. [from grêle, French.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,

And, lying down upon the sandy grails,

Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glafs. Fairy Queen.

- GRAIN. n. f. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,

And say which grain will grow, and which will not. Shakef.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shak. Coriolanus.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsmen

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,

And shortly comes to harvest. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,

Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden's Pastorals.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftner covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains

That issue out of dust. Shakefp. Meas. for Measure.

By intelligence

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physick twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny weight; a grain so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds. Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water as abovesaid. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

His brain

Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras, p. i.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South's Sermons.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving. Addis.

I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakefp.

9. The body of the wood.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,

Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solid parts, contains a curdled grain which is not to be found in ivory.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.

Stones of a constitution so compact, and a grain so fine, that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.

11. Died or stained substance.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,

And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,

Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser's Prothalam.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd,

Livelier than melibæan, or the grain

Of farra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton's P. Lost.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,

All in a robe of darkest grain,

Flowing with majestick train. Milton.

The third, his feet

Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,

Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour.

Your minds, preoccupied with what

You rather must do than what you should do,

Made you against the grain to voice him consul. Shakefp.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,

I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,

Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;

Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,

Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden's Juvenal.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton's Opt.

- GRAINED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid

In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,

Yet hath any night of life some memory. Shakespeare.

- GRAINS. n. f. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.

Give them grains their fill,

Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben. Jonfs. New Inn.

- GRAINY. adj. [from grain.]

1. Full of corn.

2. Full of grains or kernels.

- GRAMERCY. interj. [contracted from grant me mercy.] An obsolete expression of surprise.

Gramercy, sir, said he; but mote I weet

What strange adventure do ye now pursue? Fairy Queen.

Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what's the news? Shakefp.

- GRAMINEOUS. adj. [gramineus, Latin.] Grassy. Gramineous plants are such as have a long leaf without a footstalk.

- GRAMINIVOROUS. adj. [gramen and voro, Latin.] Grass-eating; living upon grass.

The ancients were versed chiefly in the dissection of brutes, among which the graminivorous kind have a party-coloured choroides. Sharp's Surgery.

- GRAMMAR. n. f. [grammaire, French; grammatica, Latin; γραμματική.]

1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.

We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.

2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.

Varium & mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

- GRAMMAR School. n. f. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.

Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.

- GRAMMA'RIAN. n. f. [grammairien, French, from grammar.] One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians. Holder's Elements of Speech.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators. Dryden.
GRAMMA'TICAL. adj. [grammatica, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Sidne, b. ii.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Holder.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GRAMMA'TICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Watts.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetorick to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

GRAMMATICASTER. n. f. [Latin.] A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

I have not vexed their language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French grammasticasters. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

GRA'MPLE. n. f. A crab-fish. Ainsworth.

GRA'MPUS. n. f. A large fish of the cetaceous kind.

GRA'NARY. n. f. [granarium, Latin.] A storehouse for threshed corn.

Ants, by their labour and industry, contrive the matter so, that corn will keep as dry in their nests as in our granaries. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 156.

The naked nations cloath,

And be th' exhaustless granary of a world. Thomson's Spring.
GRA'NATE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A kind of marble so called, because it is marked with small variegations like grains. Otherwise GRANITE.

GRAND. adj. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.]

1. Great; illustrious; high in power.

God had planted, that is, made to grow the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so grand a Lord. Ruleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. Great; splendid; magnificent.

A voice has flown

To re-enflame a grand design. Young.

3. Noble; sublime; lofty; conceived or expressed with great dignity.

4. It is used to signify ascent or descent of consanguinity.

GRA'NDAM. n. f. [grand and dam or dame.]

1. Grandmother; my father's or mother's mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady

Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste

As may be in the world. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

A woman's story, at a Winter's fire,

Authoris'd by her grandam. Shakesp. Macbeth.

We have our forefathers and great grandames all before us, as they were in Chaucer's days. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Thy tygre's heart belies thy angel face:

Too well thou shew'st thy pedigree from stone;

Thy grandame's was the first by Pyrrha thrown. Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women

Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have right,

And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

GRA'NDCHILD. n. f. [grand and child.] The son or daughter of my son or daughter; one in the second degree of descent.

Augustus Cæsar, out of indignation against his daughters and Agrippa his grandchild, would say that they were not his seed, but imposthumes broken from him. Bacon's Apophthegms.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so

May great grandchildren of thy praises grow. Donne.

He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grandchild of king James. Carend.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both! Milt.n.

He 'scaping with his gods and reliques fled,

And tow'rd's the shore his little grandchild led. Denham.

GRA'NDAUGHTER. n. f. [grand and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

GRANDE'E. n. f. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] A man of great rank, power, or dignity.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they sway'd. Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. South's Sermons.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceroalties for the grandees, and posts of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRANDE'VITY. n. f. [from grandævus, Latin.] Great age; length of life. Diët.

GRANDE'VOUS. adj. [grandævus, Latin.] Long lived; of great age. Diët.

GRA'NDEUR. n. f. [French.]

1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur. South's Sermons.

2. Elevation of sentiment or language.

GRA'NDFATHER. n. f. [grand and father.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon's Apophth.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminsterhall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great. Swift.

GRANDI'FICK. adj. [grandis and facio, Latin.] Making great. Diët.

GRA'NDINOUS. adj. [grandis, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail. Diët.

GRA'NDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Camden's Remains.

GRA'NDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.] The father's or mother's mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. 1 Tim. i. 5.

GRA'NDSIRE. n. f. [grand and fire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandfire and my father sat? Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Thy grandfire, and his brother, to whom fame

Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandfire knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster? Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimick ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandfires in their doublets drest. Pope.

GRA'NDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store,

Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben. Johnson's Discov.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakesp.

The loose unletter'd hinds,

When for their teeming flocks and granges full

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein, unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRA'NITE. n. f. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall and the adjacent counties it is found on the surface of the earth in prodigious masses, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is used for the steps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and and is also found in the West of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being cast out of various fragments of marble, because they appear composed of particles or granules of different colours, is easily confuted by an accurate inspection of the structure and formation of those granules, the least and meanest of which no human art could ever compose, nor fire leave in the state in which we see them. A third sort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant polish: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immense strata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are also frequent on the shores of Guernsey, from whence it is brought as ballast, and used in paving our streets. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison on Italy.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Oft my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Cay.

To GRANT. v. a. [from garantir, French, Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minsheu thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,
The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire
A moment elder than my rival fire,
Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. I Sa. xvii.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts xiii. 18.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shak. R. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;
The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dry.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowel.

All the whole land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser's State of Ireland.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker, b. iii. f. 11.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands. Swift.

GRANTOR. n. f. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granular bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, Fr. from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Spratt.

To GRANULATE. v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Ray.

GRANULATION. n. f. [granulation, French, from granulate.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Sharp's Surgery.

GRANULE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Colours.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Turn back thine hand, as the grape gatherers into the baskets. Jer. vi. 9.

Anacreon, for thy sake

I of the grape no mention make;

Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,

Curst plant I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r discry'd,

Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope's Odyssey.

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. See MUSK.

GRAPESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,

A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRAPHICAL. adj. [γραφικω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon's Natural History.

GRAPHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

GRAPNEL. n. f. [grapin, French.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

To GRAPPLE. v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappeln, German.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements past,

Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller:

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings? South's Sermons.

Antæus here and stern Alcides strive,

And both the grappling statues seem to live. Addison.

2. To contest in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,

Two grappling Ætna's on the ocean meet,

And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden:

To GRAPPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,

And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shak. H. V.

I will put that business in your bosoms,

Whose execution takes your enemy off,

Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

GRAPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus, strove

With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose

Fresh

Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
Or did his genius

Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and grievous grapplement. Fairy Queen.

GRA'SHOPPER. n. f. [grafs and hop.] A small insect that hops in the Summer grafs. The cicada of the Latins, or cicala of the Italians, is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers. Shakesp. Ro. and Jul.
Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Bacon.

Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chilness all around;
The grashopper avoids the untainted air,
Nor in the midst of Summer ventures there. Addison.

The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them. Addison's Spectator.

GRA'SIER. See GRAZIER.

To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.

O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind. Sidney, b. ii.

In his right hand

Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, bold. Denham.

Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

2. To seize; to catch at.

This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the Summer before. Clarendon.

To GRASP. v. n.

1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.

See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for life. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

3. To gripe; to encroach.

Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps 'till he can hold no more. Dryden.

GRASP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp,

To kill the ravisher. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.

2. Possession; hold.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Power of seizing.

Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon, b. viii.

GRA'SPER. n. f. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at.

GRASS. n. f. [græs, Saxon.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.

Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grafs, and bellow as bulls. Jer. l. ii.

The trade of beef for foreign exportation was prejudiced, and almost sunk; for the flesh being young, and only grafs fed, was thin, light and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt, or be preserved by it, for long voyages, or a slow consumption. Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;

But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming Summer's grafs. Swift.

GRASS of Parnassus. n. f. [parnassia, Latin.]

It hath a rose-shaped flower of five large leaves, and five small at the bottom fringed, of a greenish colour, and planted orbicularly: out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, which turns to an oval membranaceous fruit, having but one cell filled with seeds. This plant grows wild in most meadows, particularly in the North. It is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grafs, though the plant has no resemblance to the grafs kind. Miller.

To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grafs; to become pasture.

Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,

With oats ye may sow it, the sooner to grafs,

More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tuss. Husband.

GRASS-PLOT. n. f. [grafs and plot.] A small level covered with short grafs.

Here on this grafs-plot, in this very place,

Come and sport. Shakespeare's Tempest.

With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,

Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate

Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook

Of Erebus. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

To GRATE. v. n.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?

What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,

That you should seal this lawless bloody book

Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakesp. Henry IV.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates. Shakespeare.

Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Esirange's Fables.

This grated harder upon, and raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the seeming unreasonableness of former articles. South's Sermons.

I never

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Locke.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate. Hooker, b. v. f. 36.

GRA'TEFUL. adj. [gratus, Latin.]

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind

By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton.

Years of service past,

From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden's Fables.

2. Pleading; acceptable; delightful; delicious.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

GRAVELLY. adj. [graveleux, French, from gravel.] Full of gravel; abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.

There are some natural spring-waters that will inlapidate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a gravelly stone.

Bacon's N. Hist.

If you live in a consumptive air, make choice of the more open, high, dry, and gravelly part of it.

Harvey on Consumpt.

GRAVELY. adv. [from grave.]

1. Solemnly; seriously; soberly; without lightness or mirth.

Thou stand'st

Gravelly in doubt when to hold them wise.

Milton.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravelly what she would have her to do.

Spectator. N<sup>o</sup>. 475.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles;

The queen of learning gravelly smiles.

Swift.

A formal story was very gravelly carried to his excellency, by some zealous members.

Swift.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

You no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears,

Than settled age his fables, and his weeds

Importing health and graveness.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;

Number makes long disputes and graveness dull.

Denham.

GRA'VEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Lat.] Strong scented. Dict.

GRA'VER. n. f. [graveur, French, from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. The file or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this.

Boyle.

The toilsome hours in diff'rent labour slide,

Some work the file, and some the graver guide.

Gay's Fan.

GRAVIDITY. n. f. [gravidus, Latin.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

Women, obstructed, have not always the forementioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

GRA'VING. n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skilful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.

2 Chro. ii. 14.

To GRA'VITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the center of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursu'd,

That matter is with active force endu'd,

That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,

And to each other gravitate, assert.

Blackmore's Creation.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body.

Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre.

Bentley's Sermons.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by?

Pope's Ess. on Man.

GRAVITY. n. f. [graviditas, Latin; gravité, French]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre of the earth, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and apparent, vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth.

Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 15.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts parts

- parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opt.
2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.
No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare's Jul. Cæsar.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon, Essay 57.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd. Dryden's Æn.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

GRA'VY. n. f. The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

They usually boil and roast their meat until it falls almost off from the bones; but we love it half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter.

Harvey on Consumptions.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GRAY. adj. [græg, Saxon; grau, Danish; graa, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.
They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.
- These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton's Opt.

2. White or hoary with old age.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grisly, and many others. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

Anon
Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assèmbles. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanv. Sceps.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold
Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator, No. 517.

Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shakesp.
- I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shak. R. and Jul.
- Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay's Trivia.
- GRAY. n. f. A badger. Ainsworth.
- GRA'YBEARD. n. f. [gray and beard.] An old man, in contempt.

Youngling, thou can'st not love so dear as I.
—Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shakespeare.

Have I in conquest stretcht mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakesp. Jul. Cæs.

GRA'YHOUND. See GREYHOUND.

GRA'YLING. n. f. The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton's Angler.

GRA'YNESS. n. f. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

To GRAZE. v. n. [from grafs.]

1. To eat grafs; to feed on grafs.
The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shakespeare's As you like it.

That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakesp. Henry V.

To GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grafs.
Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakespeare.

O happy man, faith he, that, lo! I see
Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,
If he but know his good! Daniel's Civil War.

The chief beheld their chariots from afar;
Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

Grounds graze well the next year after plowing. Mortimer.

Some graze their land 'till Christmas, and some longer. Mort.

He hath a house and barn in repair, and a field or two to graze his cows, with a garden and orchard. Swift.

2. To feed upon.
I was at first as other beasts, that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milton.

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his blood. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

A man that studieth revenge keeps his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon, Essay 4.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker, Dedication.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green. Bacon's Natural History.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer's Husbandry.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance; that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts's Logick.

7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My fallad days,

When I was green in judgment, cold in blood! Shakefp.

Upon the spit, next May produces green. King's Cookery.

GREEN. n. f.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,

That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd. Shakefp.
But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn;

And walks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.
Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in daylight; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively. Newton's Opt.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue: if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green. Watts's Logick.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town. Shakefp.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been,
Follow me as I sing. Milton.

The young Æmilia, fairer to be seen

Than the fair lilly on the flow'ry green. Dryden's Fables.

3. Leaves; branches; wreaths.

With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,

And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden's Virg.

Ev'ry brow with chearful green is crown'd;

The feasts are doubled, and the bowls go round. Dryden.

The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind. Dryden.

To GREEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make green. A low word.

Great Spring before

Green'd all the year; and fruits and blossoms blush'd

In social sweetness on the self-same bough. Thomf. Spring.

GREENBROOM. n. f. [cytiso genista, Latin.]

It hath papilionaceous flowers, which are succeeded by compressed pods, in which are contained many kidney-shaped seeds: the branches of the trees are flexible, and have sometimes single, and other times three leaves joined together. This shrub grows wild upon barren dry heaths. Miller.

GREENCLOTH. n. f. A board or court of justice held in the counting-house of the king's household, for the taking cognizance of all matters of government and justice within the king's court-royal; and for correcting all the servants that shall offend. Dict.

For the greencloth law, take it in the largest sense, I have no opinion of it. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

GREENEYED. adj. [green and eye.] Having eyes coloured with green.

Doubtful thoughts, and rash-embac'd despair,

And shudd'ring fear, and greeney'd jealousy. Shakespeare.

GREENENGAGE. n. f. A species of PLUM, which see.

GREENHOUSE. n. f. [green and house.] A house in which tender plants are sheltered from the weather.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, which you may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your green- house, kindle some charcoal. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure. Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 477.

GREENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, untied,

As each had been a bride. Spenser's Prothalam.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow. Newton's Opt.

GREENLY. adj. [from green.]

1. With a greenish colour.

2. Newly; freshly.

3. Immaturely.

4. Wanly; timidly.

Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence;
nor have I cunning in protestation. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GREENNESS. n. f. [from green.]

1. The quality of being green; viridity; viridness.

About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, stateliness of growth, continual greenness, or poetical fancies have made at any time famous. Sidney, b. i.

In a meadow, though the meer grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. B. Johnf.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greenness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself. Digby on Bodies:

2. Immaturity; unripeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife. Sidney, b. ii.

3. Freshness; vigour.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person. South's Sermons.

4. Newness.

GREENSICKNESS. n. f. [green and sickness.] The disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces.

Sour eructations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances, are the case of girls in the greensickness. Arbuthnot.

GREENSWARD. } n. f. [green and sward: of the same original

GREENSWORD. } with swath.] The turf on which grass grows.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever

Ran on the greensward. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

After break their fast

On greenworld ground, a cool and grateful taste. Dryden.

In shallow soils all is gravel within a few inches; and sometimes in low ground a thin greenward, and sloughy underneath; which last turns all into bog. Swift.

GRE'ENWEED. n. f. [green and weed] Dyers weed.

GRE'ENWOOD. n. f. [green and wood.] A wood considered as it appears in the Spring or Summer. It is sometimes used as one word.

Among wild herbs under the greenwood shade. Fairfax.

It happen'd on a Summer's holiday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon shunn'd the church.

Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

To GREET. v. a. [grater, Latin; gætan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.

I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves. Donne.

I would gladly go,

To greet my Pallas with such news below. Dryden's Æn.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner

You greet with present grace, and great prediction;
To me you speak not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. To salute in kindness or respect.

My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
—God bless your grace with health and happy days. Shakesf.

Now the herald lark

Left his ground nest, high tow'ring to descry
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.

Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.

The sea's our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet. Waller.

Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn:
None greets; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden's Fables:

4. To congratulate.

His lady, seeing all that channel from far,
Approacht in haste to greet his victorie. Fairy Queen, b. i.

5. To pay compliments at a distance.

The king's a-bed,

And sent great largess to your officers;
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste

Is now urg'd on you.
—We will greet the time. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such was that face on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.

To GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakesp.

GREETER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who greets.

GREETING. n. f. [from greet.] Salutation at meeting, or compliments at a distance.

I from him

Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

GREEZE. n. f. [Otherwise written greece. See GREECE, or GRIEZE, or GRICE, from degrees.] A flight of steps; a step.

In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, this man's a flatterer: if one be,
So are they all; for every greeze of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate,
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

GRE'GAL. adj. [greg, gregis, Lat.] Belonging to a flock. Diët.

GREGA'RIOUS. adj. [gregarius, Latin.] Going in flocks or herds, like sheep or partridges.

No birds of prey are gregarious. Ray on the Creation.

GRE'MIAL. adj. [gremium, Lat.] Pertaining to the lap. Diët.

GRENA'DE. n. f. [from pomum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusee fastened to the touch-hole: as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. These grenades serve to fire close and narrow passages, and are often thrown with the hand among the soldiers to disorder their ranks, more especially in those posts where they stand thickest; as in trenches, redoubts, and lodgments. Harr.

GRE'NADIER. n. f. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment: such men being employed to throw grenades.

Peace allays the shepherd's fear

Of wearing cap of grenadier.

Gay's Pastorals.

GRENA'DO. n. f. See GRENADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,

Not all those mouth grenados can suffice.

Cleaveland.

You may as well try to quench a flaming grenado with a shell of fair water, as hope to succeed. Watts.

GREUT. n. f. A kind of fossil body.

A sort of tin-ore, with its greut; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of bay salt, and of a brown shining colour immersed therein. Grew's Musæum.

GREW. The preterite of grow.

The pleasing task he fails not to renew;

Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew. Dryden's Fables.

GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray.] See GRAY.

This ancient ruffian, fir, whose life I spar'd at suit of his grey beard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Our green youth copies what grey sinners act,

When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.

GRE'YHOUND. n. f. [græghund, Saxon.] A tall fleet dog that chases in sight.

First may a trusty greyhound transform himself into a tyger. Sidney, b. i.

So on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,

A hast'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go. Sidney.

Th' impatient greyhound, slipt from far,

Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare. Dryden.

GRICE. n. f.

1. A little pig. Gouldman.

2. A step or greeze.

No, not a grice;

This a step to love. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

To GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Italian.] To cut; to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not in use.

His poignant spear he thrust with puissant sway,
At proud Cymochles, whiles his shield was wide,
That through his thigh the mortal steel did gride. F. Queen.

So fore

The griding sword, with discontinuous wound,
Pass'd through him! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

GRIDELIN. adj. A colour mixed of white and red.

The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence fatten, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden's Fab.

GRIDIRON. n. f. [grind, Islandick, a grate and iron.] A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.

He had added two bars to the gridiron. Spectator, N°. 570.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;

For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shakespeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, or wishing one's self unborn, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South's Sermons.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison's Spect.

2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.]

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,

And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.

The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility? Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

3. Pain; disease.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

To GRIEVE. v. a. [grever, French; griever, Flemish; gravis, Latin.] To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Lu iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psal.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi. 6.

Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Rowe's Ambitious Step.

To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends.

Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Shak. H. IV.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Dryden's Fables.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.

To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous.

Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die.

Prov. xv. 10.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they may quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to.

Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.

Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Shakesp.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. Painfully; with pain.

Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,

Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously.

Fairy Queen.

2. With discontent; with ill will.

Gritus, perceiving how grievously the matter was taken,
with the danger he was in, began to doubt.

Knolles.

3. Calamitously; miserably.

I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information in this point, oftentimes grievously vexed.

Hooker, b. v.

4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.

Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt.

Ray on the Creation.

GRIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.] Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

Is. xxi. 15.

GRIFFIN. n. f. [This should rather be written gryphon, or gry-griffon.] phon, gryps, γρύψ; but it is generally written griffon] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient.

Peacham on Blazoning.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold.

Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel.

3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; grætilus festivus, Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,

She laughs to see me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,

And brisk as bottle-ale.

Swift.

TO GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRI'LLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

TO GRIL'LY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,

We're grillied all at Temple-bar.

Hudibras, p. iii.

GRIM. adj. [grimma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,

With change of fear to see the lion look so grim.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face

Bears a command in't.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes

Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm

Excite the mortified man.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,

Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?

Milton.

Expert to turn the sway

Of battle, open when and where to close

The ridges of grim war.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

He that dares to die,

May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,

The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow.

Denham's Sophy.

Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,

Doubling the native horror of the war,

And making death more grim.

Addison's Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Grim visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front.

Shak. Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shak.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques;

Against th' haranguer's politicks,

With smart remarks of leering faces,

And annotations of grimaces!

Hudibras, p. iii.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders.

South's Sermons.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field.

L'Estrange, Fable 116.

The French nation is addicted to grimace.

Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizard, to avoid grimace,

Allows all freedom, but to see the face.

Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, grey, and malin, or little
Moll.]

1. Grey little woman; the name of an old cat.

So, poets sing,

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn

An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,

Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice

Sure ruin.

Phillips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply insinuated; sully-ing blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept;
for why? she sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood.

Woodward on Fossils.

TO GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to sully deeply.

My face I'll grime with filth,

Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots.

Shakespeare.

GRI'MLY. adv. [from grim.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly;

And threaten present blusters,

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd

To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;

There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,

Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies.

Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; sullenly.

The augurs

Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge.

Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

GRI'MNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror; frightfulness of visage.

TO GRIN. v. n. [grennian, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips.

Small curs are not regarded when they grin;

But great men tremble when the lion roars.

Shakesp. H. VI.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!

Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.

What valour were it, when a cut doth grin;

For one to trust his hand between his teeth,

When he might spurn him with his foot away?

Shakesp.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth.

Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears;

About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;

The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

Dryden's Æn.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;

But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view.

Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth

To grinning laughter and to frantick mirth.

Prior.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.

Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.

—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin;

The tawning joy of courtiers and of dogs.

Dryden.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.

Addison's Spectat.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

GRIN. n. f. [grȳn, grȳne, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like

Like a birde that hasteth to his gryn,
Not knowinge the perile. Chaucer.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job xviii. 9.
To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [grun-
ban, gegrunden, ground, Saxon.]
1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.
And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Mat.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.
2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.
Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fithe is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it. Herbert.
Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd. Fables.
That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. To rub one against another.
So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Nat. History.
4. To harass; to oppress.
Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addis.
To GRIND. v. n. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.
Fetter'd they fend thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.
Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.
GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]
1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.
2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.
Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.
3. [grind-tooth.] The back teeth; the double teeth.
The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.
He the raging lions confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.
The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind and commix the aliments. Ray on the Creation.
Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbut.
4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.
One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd. Juven.
Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.
GRINDLESTONE. } n. f. [from grind and stone] The stone
GRINDSTONE. } on which edged instruments are sharpened.
Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindlestones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives and sells. Ben. Johnson.
Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone 'till bright. Moxon.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin] He that grins.
The frightful'st grinner
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator, No. 170.
GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.
GRIP. n. f. A small ditch. Ainsworth.
To GRIPE. v. a. [greipan, Gothick; grupan, Saxon; grijpen,
Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]
1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.
He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shakespeare's King John.
He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's Æn.
2. [Gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.
A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Fairy Queen.
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands. Shakesf. Hen. IV.
3. To close; to clutch.
Unlucky Welsted! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.
4. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. }
Dryden's Fables.
To GRIPE. v. n. To pinch the belly; to give the colick.
Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.
Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.
Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.
GRIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.
Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Fairy Queen.
They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand. Shak. Macb.
Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakesp.
He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare's Henry V.
I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryd. Æn.
2. Squeeze; pressure.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden's Fables.
3. Oppression; crushing power.
I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master. Shak. H. VIII.
4. Affliction; pinching distress.
Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Can't thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty? Otway.
5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach; colick.
In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the ictical have a great sourness and gripes, with windiness. Floyer.
GRIPER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.
Others pretend zeal, and yet are profess'd usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton on Melancholy.
GRIPINGLY. adv. [from griping.] With pain in the guts.
Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work gripingly. Bacon's Natural History.
GRIPPLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a griping miser. Spenser.
GRISAMBER. n. f. Used by Milton for ambergris.
Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Grisamber steam'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. ii.
GRISE. n. f. [See GREEZE, as it should be written.] A step,
or scale of steps.
Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a gripe or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shakespeare's Othello.
GRISKIN. n. f. [grisgin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebræ of a hog broiled.
GRISLY. adj. [grylu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous;
frightful; terrible.

G R I

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Queen.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see. Spenser.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Sh. H. VI.
Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milt. P. L.
For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron. Milton.

The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight. Dryden's Fables.
In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryd. Innocence.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again. Dryden's Fables.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound. Dryden's Fables.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear. Addison.
GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.
Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water. Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tresp.
2. Supply; provision.
Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have no bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Nat. History.

Left the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annular gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore's Creation.

GRIT. n. f. [grȳtta, grȳot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.
3. Sand; rough hard particles.
Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap. Grew's Musæum.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle. Phillips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opaque, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogeneous matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocola of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of folding metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

G R O

What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, glittering, brownish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects. Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton's Opt.

GRIZELIN. adj. [More properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.

—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakesp. Hamlet.

His hair just grizzled,

As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide

In plenteous growth, their asses ears to hide. Dryd. Juven.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white;
and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon's Nat. History.

To GROAN. v. n. [granan, Saxon; gronen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,

Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job. xxiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign,

Under her own weight groaning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,

Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Odyssey.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.

Alas poor country,

Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;

And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GRO'ANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,

That back again it did aloft rebound,

And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound. F. Qua.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dutch; gross, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woollen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality prevailed on to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GRO'CER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plumbs and spices for gain. Watts's Logic.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove

The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garth.

GRO'CERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea;
sugar; raisins; spice.

His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon, b. viii.

GRO'GERAM. } n. f. [gros grain, French; grossogranus, low
GRO'GRAM. } Latin. Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with large
GRO'GRAN. } woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,

Your only wearing is your grogeram. Donne.

Natolia affords great store of chamelots and grograms. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, rogram, or the like. Brown's Vul. Err.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through; and did more execution upon me in rogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison's Spectator.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her rogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;

Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.

GRO'MWELL. n. f. [lithospermum, Latin.] Gromill or gray-mill. A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, cut into five long narrow segments: the flower, which is, for the most part, small, consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and open at the top: the pointal is incompass'd by four embryo's, which become so many roundish hard polished seeds. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led

Into a goodly lodge. Fairy Queen, b. i.

From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;

Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom

Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.

In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father, a little before, had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse.

Peacham on Poetry.

Would'st thou be touch'd

By the presuming hands of saucy grooms? Dryd. Don Sebast.

Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep

Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryd.

2. A young man.

I presume for to intreat this groom,

And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax, b. ii.

3. A man newly married:

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, into which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

The plates of iron fastened at the bottom of the box preserved the balance while it fell, and every joint of it was well grooved. Gulliver's Travels.

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark

Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

We grobe for the wall like the blind, and we grobe as if we had no eyes. If. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;

And grobe at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange, Fable 131.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grobe after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,

And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,

I grobe and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grobe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grobe them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant

The bottom of the pan to grobe. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grobe.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gros, French; grosso, Italian; crassus, Latin.]

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker, b. i.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is aham'd,

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou do'st not. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Like gross terms,

The prince will in the perfectness of time

Cast off his followers. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd

Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love

Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the grossest sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spratt's Sermons.

It is a gross mistake of some men; to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge's Sermons.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom

Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,

And feature gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Thick; not refined; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,

The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea,

Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker, b. iv. f. 12.

Treason and murder ever kept together,

As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;

Working so grossly in a natural cause,

That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakefp. Hen. V.

And thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,

That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?

—Speak not so grossly. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If at any time I speak of light and rays as coloured, or endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people, in seeing all these experiments, would be apt to frame. Newton's Opt.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon's Natural History, No. 966.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;

Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,

Triumphing over death. Milton.

So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect; it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opt.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known

Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shak.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,

Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head

Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides

With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,

Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,

Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,

And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,

Grottesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope's Sat. of Horace.

GROTTO. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,

The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak.

Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought

The wood began to move:

Within this three mile may you see it coming;

I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;

Thrice happy isles! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,

Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast;

While every gale is peace, and every grove

Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VE. v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face: It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,

And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground

He groveling fell; all gored in his gushing wound. Fa. Qu.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,

Inch'd with all the honours of the world!

If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,

Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakef. Hen. IV.

Now they lie

Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt. Par. Lost.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage; and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim what'er he can express;

His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grund, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as solid, or as low.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.

From the other hill

To their fix'd station, all in bright array;

The cherubim descended, on the ground

Gliding meteorous. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jer. xxvii. 5.

There was dew upon all the ground. Judg. vi. 40.

It light on him as dew falleth on the ground. 2 Sa. xvii. 12.

Too late young Turnus the delusion found;

Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æn.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds;

And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.

With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood

Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts

Egypt from Syrian ground; had general names

Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

5. Farm; estate; possession.

Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,

Thy next design is on thy neighbours grounds:

His crop invites, to full perfection grown;

Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryd. Juven.

6. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Sa. ii. 22.

Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Sa. v. 4.

A multitude sit on the ground. Ma. xv. 35.

7. Dregs; lees; fæces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grounds. Mort.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.

8. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with shadows and darksome colours.

Hakewill on Providence.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

9. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

Indeed

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

10. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,

And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakesf. R. III.

11. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,

Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;

That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,

Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

12. The first principles of knowledge.

The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.

Here statemen, or of them they which can read,

May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.

After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.

13. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney, b. ii.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker, b. i. f. 1.

Thou could'st not have discern'd

Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,

No ground of enmity between us known. Milt. Par. Lost.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon, b. viii.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscomm.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,

Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury's Sermons.

14. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;

And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,

Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel's C. War.

15. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,

While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd. Aureng.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

16. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,

Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,

And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels,

Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spectator.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,

And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.

17. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,

Then join you with them like a rib of steel,

To make them stronger. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury's Sermons.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury's Sermons.

18. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

19. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.

To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fix on the ground,

Wherever she had grounded her foot, neither gods nor men could force her to retire. Rambler.

2. To found as upon cause or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground,

Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryd. Aurengz.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.

GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.

He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder. Exo. xxxii. 20.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground

And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras, p. iii.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough groundash the Trojan threw,

Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden's Æn.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call groundash. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GROUND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your groundbait, and to fish. Walton's Angler.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

The shoots trail upon the ground, and emit roots from almost every joint, which fasten themselves into the earth: the leaves are roundish, thick, rough, and crenated on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundish, bifid, and reflexed: the beard or lower lip is trifid, or cut into three segments; the middle segment is broad and bifid, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the shoots. The species are, first, common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and second, lesser groundivy. Miller.

Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. f. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of haseel or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a groundoak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mort.

GROUND-PINE. n. f. [chamæpitys, Latin.]

The leaves are narrow and trifid; the flower labiated: the place of the crest of the flower is supplied with little teeth: the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle segment being split again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the wings of the leaves. Miller.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name groundpine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch-banks by roadsides. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalick, and nervous medicine; but it is however little used at present. Hill's Mat. Med.

GROUND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tennons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tennons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summer, and beams. Mortimer's Husb.

GROUND-PLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

2. The ichnography of a building.

GROUND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbuthnot on Coins.

GROUND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 88.

GRO'UNDEDLY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanville.

GRO'UNDLESS. n. f. [from ground.] Void of reason; without ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear

Do that dear foolish bosom tear.

Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 129.

GRO'UNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson, Sermon I.

GRO'UNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water: hence one of the low vulgar. Hann.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious perriwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GRO'UNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially.

A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Ascham's Schoolm.

GRO'UNDSEL. n. f. [ground and pile, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbets on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

GRO'UNDSEL. n. f. [senecio, Latin.]

It hath a flosculous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into several segments sitting on the embryo, contained in an empalement consisting of one leaf, and divided into many parts, afterwards becoming of a conical figure: the embryo afterward becomes a seed, furnished with down; at which time the empalement is reflexed, to make way for the seeds to escape. Miller.

GRO'UNDWORK. n. f. [ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain,
Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below,
And mortals by the name of milky know;

The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; groppo, Italian.] A croud; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addis.

You should try your graving tools

On this odious group of fools.

Swift.

TO GROUP. v. a. [groupper, French.] To put into a croud; to huddle together.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heathcock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house

For better game, and look for grouse.

Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [grut, Saxon. In Scotland they call it groats.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardicute, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout,

Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout:

Which dish its pristine honour still retains,

And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.

2. That which purges off.

Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout;

The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar shout. Dryden.

3. A kind of wild apple. [Agriomelum, Latin]

TO GROW. v. n. preter. grew; part. pass. grown. [gnopan, Saxon; groeyen, Dutch.]

1. To vegetate; to have vegetable motion; to increase by vegetation.

It is not the growing of fruit that nourisheth man; but it is thy word which preserveth them. Wisd. xvi. 26.

He causeth the grafs to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Pf. civ. 14.

2. To be produced by vegetation.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves.

2 Kings xix. 29.

In this country groweth abundance of that wood, which since is brought into Europe to die red colours. Abbot.

A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after groweth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon's Natural History.

But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far?

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

In colder regions men compose

Poison with art; but here it grows.

Waller.

Those tow'rs of oak o'er fertile plains might go,

And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.

3. To shoot in any particular form.

Children, like tender osiers, take the bow;

And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden's Juv.

4. To increase in stature.

I long with all my heart to see the prince;

I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakesf. R. III.

The poor man had nothing, save one little ew-lamb, which he had bought and reared up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Sa. xii. 3.

Thine own things, and such as are grown up with thee, can't thou not know. 2 Esdr. iv. 10.

5. To come to manhood from infancy.

Now the prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whether it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke.

We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Wake.

6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk.

They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails, they grow continually. Bacon's Natural History.

Then their numbers swell,

And grow upon us.

Denham.

Divisions grow upon us, by neglect of practick duties: as every age degenerated from primitive piety, they advanced in nice enquiries. Decay of Piety.

8. To improve; to make progress.

Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 2 Pet. iii. 18.

As he grew forward in years he was trained up to learning, under one Pronapides, who taught the Pelasgick letter invented by Linus. Pope's Essay on Homer.

9. To advance to any state.

Nature, as it grows again towards earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey dull and heavy. Shakespeare.

They doubted whereunto this would grow. Acts v. 24.

The king, by this time, was grown to such an height of reputation for cunning and policy, that every accident and event that went well was laid and imputed to his foresight. Bacon.

But when to ripen'd manhood he shall grow,

The greedy sailer shall the seas forego. Dryden's Virgil.

Verse, or the other harmony of prose, I have so long studied and practised, that they are grown into a habit, and become familiar to me. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

10. To come by degrees; to reach any state gradually.

After they grew to rest upon number, rather competent than vast, they grew to advantages of place, cunning diversions, and the like; and they grew more skilful in the ordering of their battles. Bacon's Essays.

The trespasses of people are grown up to heaven, and their sins are got beyond all restraints of law and authority. Rogers.

11. To come forward; to gather ground.

Some seeing the end of their government nigh, and troublous practice growing up, which may work trouble to the next governour, will not attempt redress. Spenser on Ireland.

It was now the beginning of October, and Winter began to grow fast on: great rain, with terrible thunder and lightning, and mighty tempests, then fell abundantly. Knolles.

12. To be changed from one state to another; to become either better or worse; to turn.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakesp.

Hence, hence, and to some barbarous climate fly,

Which only brutes in human form does yield,

And man grows wild in nature's common field. Dryden.

The nymph grew pale, and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight. Dryden.

Patient of command

In time he grew; and growing us'd to hand,

He waited at his master's board for food. Dryden's Æn.

We may trade and be busy, and grow poor by it, unless we regulate our expences. Locke.

You will grow a thing contemptible, unless you can supply the loss of beauty with more durable qualities. Swift.

Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, grew to be a free port, where nations warring traded, as in a neutral country.

Arbutnot on Coins.

13. To proceed as from a cause.

What will grow out of such errors, as masked under the cloak of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, 'till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

Shall we set light by that custom of reading, from whence so precious a benefit hath grown? Hooker, b. v.

Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the king. Ez. iv. 22.

Scipio Nasica feared lest, if the dread of that enemy were taken away, the Romans would grow either to idleness or civil dissention. Abbo.

The want of trade in Ireland proceeds from the want of people; and this is not grown from any ill qualities of the climate or air, but chiefly from so many wars. Temple.

vineyard to be grubbed up. L'Estrange.

Forest land,

From whence the furly ploughman grubs the wood. Dryden.

The grubbing up of woods and trees may be very needful, upon the account of their unthriftness. Mortimer's Husband.

As for the thick woods, which not only Virgil but Homer mentions, they are most of them grubbed up, since the promontory has been cultivated and inhabited. Addison on Italy.

GRUB. n. f. [from grubbing, or mining.]

1. A small worm that eats holes in bodies.

There is a difference between a grub and a butterfly, and yet your butterfly was a grub. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

New creatures rise,

A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;

'Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,

The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

Sometimes they are eaten with grubs. Mortimer's Husband.

The grub,

Oft unobserv'd, invades the vital core;

Pernicious tenant! and her secret cave

Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp

Ceaseless. Phillips.

2. A short thick man; a dwarf. In contempt.

John Romane, a short clownish grub, would bear the whole carcase of an ox, yet never tugged with him. Carew.

To GRU'BBLE. v. n. [grubelen, German, from grub.] To feel in the dark.

Thou hast a colour;

Now let me rowl and grubble thee:

Blind men say white feels smooth, and black feels rough:

Thou hast a rugged skin; I do not like thee. Dryden.

GRU'BSTREET. n. f. Originally the name of a street in Moor-fields in London, much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

Χαῖρ' Ἰδακὴ μὲν ἀεθλα, μὲν ἀλγεα πικρά

Ἀσπασίως τὸν ἔδαος ἰκάνομαι.

The first part, though calculated only for the meridian of grubstreet, was yet taken notice of by the better sort. Arbutnot.

I'd sooner ballads write, and grubstreet lays. Gay.

To GRUDGE. v. a. [from gruger, according to Skinner, which in French is to grind or eat. In this sense we say of one who resents any thing secretly, he chews it. Grugnach, in Welsh, is to murmur; to grumble. Grunigh, in Scotland, denotes a grumbling morose countenance.]

1. To envy; to see any advantage of another with discontent.

What means this banishing me from your counsels? Do you love your sorrow so well, as to grudge me part of it? Sidney.

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train. Shak. K. Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;

Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:

He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,

Grudges their life from whence his own began. Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,

Much grudg'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward. Dryd.

Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition. Speccat.

Let us consider the ample provision of waters, those inexhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudged
the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God. Bentley's Sermons.

I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Swift.

2. To give or take unwillingly.

Let

Let me at least a funeral marriage crave,
Nor grudge my cold embraces in the grave. Dryd. Aurengz.
You steer betwixt the country and the court,
Nor gratify whate'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryd. Fab.
They have grudged those contributions, which have set our country at the head of all the governments of Europe. Addison.
To GRUDGE. v. n.

1. To murmur; to repine.

They knew the force of that dreadful curse, whereunto idolatry maketh subject; nor is there cause why the guilty suffaining the same should grudge or complain of injustice. Hook.

2. To be unwilling; to be reluctant.

Many times they go with as great grudging to serve in his majesty's ships, as if it were to be slaves in the galleys. Raleigh.

demned. Ja. v. 9.

4. To wish in secret. A low word.

E'en in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave. Dryden's Medal.

5. To give or have any uneasy remains. I know not whether the word in this sense be not rather grugeons, or remains;
grugeons being the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.

My Dolabella,

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever? Dryden.
GRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Old quarrel; inveterate malevolence; fullen malice.

Many countries about her were full of wars, which, for old grudges to Corinth, were thought still would conclude there. Sidney, b. ii.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakespeare.

Let me go in to see the generals:

There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Deep-fester'd hate;

A grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
And mutually bequeath'd from fire to son. Tate's Juvenal.

Those to whom you have

With grudge prefer'd me. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

4. Remorse of conscience. Ainsworth.

5. Some little commotion, or forerunner of a disease. Ainsw.

GRUDGINGLY. adj. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignant-ly; reluctantly.

Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;

Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord:

The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;

They drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd. Dryden.

GRUEL. n. f. [gruau, gruella, French.] Food made by boiling oatmeal in water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

Finger of birth-strangl'd babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;

Make the gruel thick and slab. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel

Upon the strength of water gruel? Prior.

Gruel made of grain, broths, malt-drink not much hopped, posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth. Arbuthnot.

GRUFF. adj. [groff, Dutch.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend, in hideous order, sat

Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,

Gruff discontent, through ignorance misled. Garth.

The appellation of honour was such an one the gruff, such an one the stocky. Addison.

GRUFFLY. adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,

All sheath'd in arms, and gruffy look'd the god. Dryden.

GRUFFNESS. n. f. [from gruff.] Ruggedness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

GRUM. adj. [contracted from grumble.] Sour; furly; severe.

Nic looked sour and grum, and would not open his mouth.

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

To GRUMBLE. v. n. [grommelen, grommen, Dutch.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bridegroom,

A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Shakesp.

Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Th' accurst Philistian stands on th' other side,

Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride. Cowley.

Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due. South's Sermons.

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not. L'Espr.

L'Avare, not using half his store,

Still grumbles that he has no more. Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,

Yet, pinch'd with raging hunger, scours away;

Hunts in the face of danger all the day;

At night, with fullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey. Dryd.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.

Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice. Matteux.

Like a storm

That gathers black upon the frowning sky,

And grumbles in the wind. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Vapours foul

Dash on the mountains brow, and shake the woods

That grumbling wave below. Thomson's Winter.

GRUMBLER. n. f. [from grumble.] One that grumbles; a murmurer; a discontented man.

The half-pence are good half-pence, and I will stand by it:
if I made them of silver, it would be the same thing to the grumbler. Swift.

GRUMBLING. n. f. [from grumble.] A murmuring through discontent; a grudge.

I have serv'd

Without or grudge or grumbings. Shakesp. Tempest.

GRUME. n. f. [grumeau, French; grumus, Latin.] A thick viscid consistence of a fluid: as the white of an egg, or clotted like cold blood. Quincy.

GRUMLY. adv. [from grum.] Sullenly; morosely.

GRUMMEL. n. f. [lithospermum, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted.

The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due consistence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green. Arbuthnot on Diet.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. f. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wise's Surgery.

GRUNSEL. n. f. [More usually groundsil, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon grunsel.] The groundsil; the lower part of the building.

Next came one

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark

Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off

In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,

Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers. Milton.

To GRUNT. } v. n. [grunio, Latin.] To murmur like

To GRUNTLE. } a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shakesp.

Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;

For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay's Past.

Thy brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,

Or grunt secure beneath the chesnut shade. Tickel.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,

To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;

The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,

In panick horror of pursuing dogs;

With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,

Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

From hence were heard

The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,

And herds of howling wolves. Dryden's Æn.

GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]

1. He that grunts.

2. A kind of fish. [Xepolis.] Ainsworth.

GRUNTLING. n. f. [from grunt.] A young hog.

To GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,

Because of abuses that fall,

Lest some men should have but too much,

And some again nothing at all. Tusser's Husbandry.

But what we're born for we must bear,

Our frail condition it is such,

That what to all may happen here,

If't chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben. Johnson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,

To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;

To whom he bore so fell a grutch,

He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras, p. i.

GRY. n. f. [γρῦ.] Any thing of little value: as, the paring of the nails. Diſt.

GUAIA'CUM. n. f. [See LIGNUM-VITÆ.]

Guaiacum is attenuant and aperient, and promotes discharges by sweat and urine. It is an excellent medicine in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal

venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiacum, given in the same cases with the famous balsamum polycræstum is made of it. Hill.

GUARANTEE. n. f. [garant, French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South's Sermons.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

TO GUARANTY. v. a. [garantir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

GUA'RDAGE. n. f. [from guard.] State of wardship.

A maid so tender, fair and happy,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou. Shakespeare's Othello.

GU'ARDER. n. f. One who guards. Ainsworth.

GUARDIAN. n. f. [gardien, French, from guard.]

1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.

I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.

When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,

Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains! Dryden.

Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbutnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

I gave you all,
Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd

With such a number.

3. A repository or storehouse. Not used.

Where is Duncan's body?

—Carried to Colmekill,

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,

And guardian of their bones. Shakesp. Macbeth.

GUARDIAN of the Spiritualties. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowel.

GUA'RDIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendent.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and shuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by stealth, and conceals the giver, when she bestows the gift. Dryden's Dedication to Cleomenes.

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,

The promis'd father of the future age. Pope's Messiah.

Mean while Minerva, in her guardian care,

Shoots from the starry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUA'RDIANSHIP. n. f. [from guardian.] The office of a guardian.

The curate stretched his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardianship over goods and chattels. L'Estr.

Theseus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardianship of the laws, and chief commands in war. Swift.

GUA'RDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain,

Rushes a tyger in the Lybian plain. Waller.

A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South's Sermons.

GUA'RDSHIP. n. f. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How blest'd am I, by such a man led!

Under whose wise and careful guardship

I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [Guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUA'IAVA. } n. f.

GUA'VA. }

The flowers consist of five leaves, produced in a circular order, having many stamina or threads surrounding the ovary: the ovary is of a long tubulous figure, which becomes a fleshy fruit, crowned on the top, and containing many small hard seeds. The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that, being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUBERNA'TION. n. f. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

GU'DGEON. n. f. [goujon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbets dignify my boards;

But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

2. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurement: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,

For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

GUERDON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, French.] A reward; a recompense. A word now no longer in use.

He hearken'd, and did stay from further harms,

To gain so goodly guerdon as she spake. Fairy Queen, b. i.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while

Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,

By him who has the guerdon of his guile,

For so misfeigning her true knight to be. Fairy Queen, b. i.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villanies. Knolles.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise

To scorn delights, and live laborious days;

But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,

And think to burst out into sudden blaze,

Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,

And flits the thin-spun life. Milton.

TO GUESS. v. a. [ghissen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shakesp.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

4 That

That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment?

Raleigh's History of the World.

There issue swarming bands

Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,

To be Taxcallan enemies I guess. Dryd. Indian Emperor.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government.

Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,

How that ungrateful charming maid

My purest passion has betray'd.

Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferiour deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.

Stillingsfleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

TO GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common foldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart.

Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:

Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces. Shakesp.

A poet must confess

His art's like physick, but a happy guess.

Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination.

Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason.

Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,

Let us for once a child of truth confess.

Prior.

GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous.

Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crochet,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,

To give thee lawn-sleeves, a mitre and rochet,

Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.

What confed'racy have you with the traytors

Late footed in the kingdom?

—I have a letter guessingly set down,

Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,

And not from one oppos'd.

GUEST. n. f. [ger, girt, Saxon; gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

Lu. xix. 7.

Methinks a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest

That best becomes the table.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Tell my royal guest

I add to his commands my own request.

Dryden's Æn.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defarts, defarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting.

Sidney.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence

As pearls from diamonds dropt.

Shakespeare.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

Mar. xiv. 14.

TO GUGGLE. v. n. [gorgoliare, Italian.] To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide.

Ainsworth.

GUIDANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.

Atterbury's Sermons.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking.

Rogers.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party.

Swift.

TO GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth.

Jo. xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers.

Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South's Sermons.

2. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.

Pf. xxxi. 3.

3. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house.

Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was guide to them that took Jesus.

Acts i. 16.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey.

Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,

Than led by a false guide to err by day?

Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide.

Waller.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature?

In him we live, move and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such art or knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,

But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden's Fables.

GUIDELESS. adj. [from guide.] Without a guide; without a governour or superintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,

Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,

To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.

Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,

Whose every puff bears empty shades away,

Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.

Dryden.

GUIDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shak.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand.

South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gild, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.]

A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guild- hall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.

Cowel.

Towards three or four o'clock

Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shak. R. III.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-eared milky mothers wait

At some sick miser's triple-bolted gate,

For their defrauded absent foals they make

A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope's Dunciad.

GUILE. n. f. [guille, gille, old French, the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,

And looking lovely, and oft sighing fore,

Her constant heart did court with divers guile;

But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor. Fairy Queen.

When I have most need to employ a friend,

Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,

When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shak. Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve

To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:

Subtile he needs must be who could seduce

Angels.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile.

Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Without expence at all,

By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shak. H. VI.

G U I

G U L

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
The guileful phantom now forsook the throwd,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden's Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.
GUI'LEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Infidiously; treacherously.
To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton's P. Lost.
GUI'LEFULNESS. n. f. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.
GUI'LELESS. adj. [from guile.] Without deceit; without infidiousness; simply honest.
GUI'LER. n. f. [from guile. See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by infidious practices.
But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Fairy Queen.
GUILT. n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]
1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.
2. A crime; an offence.
Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakesp. King Lear.
GUI'LTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.
Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shak. R. III.
GUI'LTINESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney, b. ii.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terrour of thy guiltiness. Shakesp. Richard III.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.
GUI'LTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shakesp. R. III.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare's Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Num. v. 31.
Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
And never willest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.
GUI'LTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.
GUI'LTLESSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney, b. ii.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured, than any man living could be. King Charles.
GUI'LTLY. adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]
1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shak.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xlii. 21.
With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson's Spring.
GUINEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.
By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.
GUINE'ADROPPER. n. f. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.
Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.
GUINEAHEN. n. f. A small Indian hen.
GUINE'APPPER. n. f. [capsicum, Latin.]
The characters are: the flowers consist of one leaf, and are expanded like those of nightshade: the fruit is soft, fleshy and membranous, divided into two or more cells, in which are contained many flat kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
GUINEAPIG. n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout.
GUISE. n. f. [The same with wise; guise, French; pira, Saxon, the p or w being changed as is common into g.]
1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.
His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife. Fairfax, b. iv.
Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakesp. Macbeth.
They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.
2. Practice; custom; property.
This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben. Johnson.
The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.
3. External appearance; dress.
When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.
The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.
GUITA'R. n. f. [ghitara, Italian; guitarre, French.] A stringed instrument of musick.
Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prior.
GULCH. } n. f. [from gulo, Latin.] A little glutton.
GU'LCHIN. } Skinner.
GULES. adj. [perhaps from geule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.
Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]
1. A bay; an opening into land.
Pisaurius, the Venetian admiral, knowing himself unable to encounter with the Turks great fleet at sea, withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knolles's History of the Turks.
2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole;
By that same hole, an entrance dark and base,
With smok and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descends to hell. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5.
I know

G U L

I know thou'd'st rather

Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,

Than flatter him in a bower.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description.

Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs?

Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce

As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

Shakespeare. Henry V.

4. Any thing insatiable.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,

Witches mummy; maw and gulf

Of the ravening salt sea shark;

Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

GULFY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son

Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun.

Milton.

At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,

All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,

And 'scap'd the perils of the gulfy main.

Pope's Odyssey.

High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle

Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile.

Pope's Odyssey.

TO GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Yet love these forc'ries did remove, and move

Thee to gull thine own mother for my love.

Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,

But Mart was too gull politick.

Hudibras, p. ii.

They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick.

L'Estr.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation.

Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

By their designing leaders taught,

The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd;

Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,

As not to be out-riden, though out-run;

By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,

And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:

Of him disposing in his own abode,

He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god.

Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sea-bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it.

Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull.

Government of the Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,

As that ungentle gull, the cuckow bird,

Useth the sparrow.

Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. i.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,

Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull

That e'er invention plaid on.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

That paltry story is untrue,

And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you.

Hudibras, p. ii.

GULLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

GULLER. n. f. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor.

GULLERY. n. f. [from gull.] Cheat; imposture.

Ainsworth.

GULLET. n. f. [goulet, French; gula, Latin.] The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the oesophagus.

It might be his doom

One day to sing

With gullet in string.

Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipe; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without wizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 8.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,

By which the artful gullet is embrac'd.

Blackmore's Creation.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet.

Arbuthnot.

TO GULLY. v. n. [corrupted from gurgle.] To run with noise.

GULLYHOLE. n. f. [from gully and hole.] The hole where the gutters empty themselves in the subterraneous sewer.

G U N

GULO'SITY. n. f. [gulosus, Latin.] Greediness; gluttony; voracity.

They are very temperate, seldom offending in ebriety, or excess of drink; nor erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 10.

TO GULP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth.

L'Estrange.

I thirsty stand,

And see the double flaggon charge their hand;

See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,

While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain.

Gay.

GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep inspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow.

More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,

And peep above the seas, he names the fair.

Dryden's Fables.

GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent.

Quincy.

One whose eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum.

Shakespeare's Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,

Which from remotest regions hither come.

Waller.

Her maiden train,

Who bore the vests that holy rites require,

Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire.

Dryden. Fables.

2. [Goma, Saxon; gumme, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

From the babe that milks me

I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums.

Untwists a wire, and from her gums

A set of teeth completely comes.

Swift.

TO GUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour.

Wiseman's Surgery.

To prevent the gumming of the eyelids cut a piece of sponge, and lay it wet upon the eye.

Wiseman's Surgery.

GUMMINESS. n. f. [from gummy.] The state of being gummy; accumulation of gum.

The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter.

Wiseman's Surgery.

GUMMO'SITY. n. f. [from gummosus.] The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the elastick fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity.

Floyer.

GUMMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummosus or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil.

Woodward's Natural History.

GUMMY. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord.

Raleigh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields.

Dryden's Virgil.

How each arising alder now appears,

And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears.

Dryden's Silenus.

2. Productive of gum.

Late the clouds

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their flock,

Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,

Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine.

Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays

His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;

Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate:

Dryden.

GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland.] The general name for firearms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,

Or like an overcharged gun, recoil

And turn upon thyself.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.

Cleveland.

In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we shun,

Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'ing gun.

Granville.

GUNNEL. n. f. [corrupted for gunwale. See GUNWALE.]

GUNNER. n. f. [from gun.] Cannonier; he whose employment is to manage the artillery in a ship.

Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit

Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and sought with surly pride.

Dryden's Fables.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden's Fables.

3. Love; liking.

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shakespeare. Timon.

Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange, Fable 38.

We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From guster, Islandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,

As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,

When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.
Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon's H. VII.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend

An aged sturdy oak, the rattling sound

Grows loud. Denham.

Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryden. Ann. Mirab.

Pardon a weak distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,

The sport of passions. Addison's Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for justs, sports.

Full jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did sit,
As one for knightly gusts and fierce encounters fit. Fa. Qu.

1. The relish of any thing; the power by which any thing excites sensations in the palate.

Pleasant gustos gratify the appetite of the luxurious. Derh.

2. Intellectual taste; liking.

In reading what I have written, let them bring no particular gusto along with them. Dryden.

GU'STY. adj. [from gust.] Stormy; tempestuous.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Sh. Jul. Cæs.
Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind. Thomson.

GUT. n. f. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Reveng'd I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound. Bacon's Natural History.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acrid or poisonous substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food: proverbially.

And cramm'd them 'till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudibras, p. ii.

With false weights their servants guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,

Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,

In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakewill on Providence.

TO GUT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.

The fishermen save the most part of their fish: some are gutted, splitted, powdered and dried. Carew's Sur. of Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,

A troop

A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryd. Juven.
Tom Brown, of facetious memory, after having guttet a proper name of its vowels, used it in his works as free as he pleased. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 567.

GU'TTATED. adj. [from gutta, Latin, a drop.] Besprinkled with drops; bedropped. Dict.

GU'TTER. n. f. [from guttur, a throat, Latin.] A passage for water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Moxon.

in the sides of them by torrents of rain. Addison on Italy.

TO GU'TTER. v. a. [from the noun] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated fands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by The divine Desdemona. Shakespeare's Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears. Sandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd. Dryden.

The gutter'd rocks, and mazy-running clefts. Thomson.

TO GU'TTLE. v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandise. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence. Dryden.

TO GU'TTLE. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow.

The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER. n. f. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.] In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

GU'TTURAL. adj. [from gutturalis, Latin.] Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spiritaly, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Holder.

GU'TTURALNESS. n. f. [from guttural.] The quality of being guttural. Dict.

GU'TWORT. n. f. [from gut and wort.] An herb.

gormandise; to feed immoderately; to swallow any liquor greedily.

Well season'd bowls the gossip's spirits raise,
Who while she guzzles chats the doctor's praise. Roscommon.

They fell to lapping and guzzling, 'till they burst themselves. L'Estrange.

No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey. Gay.

TO GU'ZZLE. v. a. To swallow with immoderate gust.

The Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing,
Still guzzling must of wine. Dryd. Juvenal.

GU'ZZLER. n. f. [from guzzle.] A gormandiser; an immoderate eater or drinker.

GYBE. n. f. [See GIBE.] A sneer; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, saucy, and as quarrellous as the weazel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO GYBE. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear,
And common courtiers love to gybe and sneer. Hubb. Ta'e.

GYMNA'STICALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.] Athletically;
fitly for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour have not the use of either, who are not gymnastically compos'd, nor actively use those parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

GYMNA'STICK. adj. [from γυμναστικός; gymnastique, French.] Pertaining to athletick exercises; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, throwing the dart, or quoit.

The Cretans wisely forbid their servants gymnasticks as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

GY'MNICK. adj. [from γυμνικός; gymnique, French.] Such as practise the athletick or gymnastick exercises.

Have they not sword-players, and ev'ry fort
Of gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners. Milton.

seeds naked.

GY'NECOCRASAY. n. f. [from γυναικονκρατία; gynecocratie, French.]
Petticoat government; female power.

GYRA'TION. n. f. [from gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impress'd on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newt.

GYRE. n. f. [from gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing going in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
But rudely rag'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly?

Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the Artick pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.

GYVES. n. f. [from gewyn, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,

And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben. Johnson's Forest.

The poor prisoners, ready to take the occasion offered, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.

Do'st thou already single me? I thought
Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton's Agonistes.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd. Fables.

TO GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare's Othello.

H.

H A B

H Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakesp.
Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crowd. Dryd. Albion.

HAAR. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.

HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowel.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ihr dafs, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon's Essays.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffeehouse, declared his opinion. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 48.

HA'BERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.

HA'BERGEON. n. f. [haubergeon, French; halbergium, low Lat.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breastplate; neckpiece; gorget.

And halbert some, and some a haberion;
So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax, b. i.

The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brais habergeon. Hudibras, p. i.

HAB'ILIMENT. n. f. [habiliment, French.] Dress; cloaths; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady, in so strange habiliment,
Teaching the satyres. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

TO HABILITATE. v. n. [habilitar, French.] To qualify; to entitle.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon's Henry VII.

HABILITA'TION. n. f. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things formerly spoken of, are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon, Essay 30.

HA'BILITY. n. f. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power.

HA'BIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement.

I shifted
Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father. Shakespeare's King Lear.

H A B

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.
Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

This is the last fatal step but one, which is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being properly that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South's Sermons.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
But faction now by habit does obey;

And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princefs
Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.

HA'BITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
This is her habitable tropique clime. Donne.

Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it, pursue. Dryden.

HA'BITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the Torrid zone. More.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HA'BITANCE. n. f. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desert hast thine *habitan*ce?

And these rich heaps of wealth do'tt hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right usance. Fa. Qu.

HA'BITANT. n. f. [habitant, Fr. habitans, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to the earth's habitant:

And for the heav'n's wide circuit, let it speak
The maker's high magnificence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Pow'rs celestial to each other's view
Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope's Odyssey.

HABITA'TION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dwelling; the state of a place receiving dwellers.

H A B

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and ev'ry star perhaps a world
Of destin'd habitation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Palaces,

For want of habitation and repair,

Dissolve to heaps of ruins.

Denham's Sophy.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Place of abode; dwelling

Wisdom, to the end the might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker, b. v.

God oft descends to visit men

Unseen, and through their habitations walks

To mark their doings.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

So is his presence more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the northern habitators. Brown.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituel, from habit, French.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition.

Sin, there in pow'r before

Once actual; now in body, and to dwell

Habitual habitant.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Art is properly unhabitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time

The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:

No speck is left of their habitual stains;

But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden's Æn,

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO HABITUATE. v. a. [habituier, French.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillot.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot on Air.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitus, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown's Vul. Err.

The will of God is like a freight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule into it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It results from the very nature and being of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.

South's Sermons.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Nerr.

In all the habitudes of life

The friend, the mistress, and the wife;

Variety we still pursue.

Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,

Was such dead authors could not give;

But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company. Dryden.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use.

Mankind is not more liable to deceit than willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,

And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds

Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,

The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,

Brought by long habitude from bad to worse;

Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

HA'BNAB. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would ne would, will ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws and squares,

With cyphers, astral characters;

Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,

Although set down habnab at random. Hudibras, p. ii.

TO HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, Fr.
from acare, an axe, Saxon.]

H A G

wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. S. dney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Richard the second here was hack'd to death. Shak. R. III.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hackt. Shakespeare.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root

Is hackt down, and his summer leaves all faded,

By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,

Meek modern faith to murder, hack and mawl. Pope.

Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,

But purple vests and flow'ry garlands please. Addis. Ovid.

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation.

Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shakespeare.

TO HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer.

I could be knighted. — What! thou liest. Sir Alice Ford, these knights will hack, and so thou shouldst alter the article of thy gentry. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

HA'CKLE. n. f. Raw filk; any filmy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle filk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton's Angler.

TO HA'CKLE. v. a. [from hack.] To dress flax.

French.]

1. A pacing horse.

2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag

And hackney of a Lapland hag,

In quest of you came hither post,

Within an hour, I'm sure, at most.

Hudibras, p. iii.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.

Three kingdoms rung

With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Roscommon.

That is no more than every lover

Does from his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.

Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,

Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend

To break my windows.

Pope, Dial. 2.

4. Any thing let out for hire.

A wit can study in the streets;

Not quite so well, however, as one mought;

A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.

5. Much used; common.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO HA'CKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To practise in one thing; to accustom to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men. Shakespeare.

long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his hacqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser's State of Ireland.

HAD. The preterite and part. pass. of have.

I had rather be a country servant maid,

Than a great queen with this condition,

To be thus taunted. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Had we not better leave this Utica,

To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison's Cato.

HA'DDOCK. n. f. [hadot, French.] A sea-fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddock. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HAFT. n. f. [hæft, Saxon; heft, Dutch, from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger

I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.

These extremities of the joints are the hasts and handles of the members. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts's Logick.

TO HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fet in a haft. Answ.

HAG. n. f. [hægerre, a goblin, Saxon; becke, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she monster.

Thus

- Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause;
His foul bags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Craſh.
2. A witch; an enchantress.
Out of my door, you witch! you bag, you baggage, you poulcat, you runnion. Shakeſ. Merry Wives of Windſor.
3. An old ugly woman.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou, old bag, of threescore years and three,
Is ſhewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden's Juven.

TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harraſs with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark ſee viſions,
And bag themſelves with apparitions. Hudibra, p. iii.
How are ſuperſtitious men bagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and viſions! L'Eſtrange.

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
To let them down before that his flights end,
As bagard hawk, preſuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth ſpend,
To truſt the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.
2. [Hager, German.] Lean. To this ſenſe I have put the following paſſage; for ſo the author ought to have written.
A bagged carion of a wolf, and a jolly ſort of dog, with good fleſh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Eſtr.
3. [Hage, Welſh.] Ugly; rugged; deformed; wildly diſordered.
She's too diſdainful;

I know her ſpirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakeſpeare.

Fearful beſides of what in fight had paſſ'd,
His hands and bagard eyes to heav'n he caſt. Dryden's Æn.

Where are the conſcious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-caſt bagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or ſlowly rais'd! Smith's Phæd. and Hipp.

HA'GGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days paſs, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud diſdainful haggard. Shakeſpeare.
2. A ſpecies of hawk.
Does the wild haggard tow'r into the ſky,
And to the South by thy direction fly? Sandys.
I enlarge my diſcourſe to the obſervation of the aires, the brancher, the ramiſh hawk, and the haggard. Walton's Angler.
3. A hag. So Garth has uſed it for want of underſtanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformed; ugly.

For her the rich Arabia ſweats her gum;
And precious oils from diſtant Indies come,
How haggardly ſoe'er ſhe looks at home. Dryd. Juven.

HA'GGESS. n. f. [from hog or hack.] A maſs of meat, generally pork chopped, and incloſed in a membrane. In Scotland as ſalve of the Latins, or ὑγιαίνε of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of ſalutation now uſed only in poetry; health be to you.

Hail, hail, brave friend!

Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou did'ſt leave it. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Her ſick head is bound about with clouds:

It does not look as it would have a hail

Or health wiſh'd in it, as on other morns. Een. Johnſon.

The angel hail

Beſtow'd, the holy ſalutation us'd

Long after to bleſt Mary, ſecond Eve. Milt. Parad. Loſt.

Farewel, happy fields,

Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail

Infernal world! and thou profoundeſt hell

Receive thy new poſſeſſor! Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. i.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;

Once firſt of men below, now firſt of birds above. Dryd.

Hail to the ſun! from whoſe returning light

The chearful ſoldier's arms new luſtre take,

To deck the pomp of battle. Roue's Tamerlane.

TO HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſalute; to call to.

Or hailstone in the ſun. Shakeſpeare.

Hard hailstones lye not thicker on the plain,

Nor ſhaken oaks ſuch ſhow'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.

HA'ILY. adj. [from hail.] Conſiſting of hail.

From whoſe dark womb a rattling tempeſt pours,

Which the cold North congeals to haily ſhowers. Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hær, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the ſoles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microſcope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the ſkin, and which draws their nourishment from the ſurrounding humours: that each hair conſiſts of five or ſix others, wrapt up in a common tegu-ment or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thruſting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

2. A ſingle hair.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakeſp. Tit. Andr.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the ſkin, be a mark of a different internal conſtitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

Naughty lady,

Theſe hairs which thou do'ſt raviſh from my chin,

Will quicken and accuſe thee. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Much is breeding;

Which, like the courſer's hair, hath yet but life,

And not a ſerpent's poiſon. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Any thing proverbially ſmall.

If thou tak'ſt more

Or leſs than juſt a pound; if the ſcale turn

But in the eſtimation of a hair,

Thou dieſt. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Courſe; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

Mr. doctör, he is a curer of ſouls, and you a curer of bodies: if you ſhould fight, you go againſt the hair of your pro-feſſion. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This ſhould rather be written hare- brained, unconfant, unſettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unſteady.

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 7.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,

But now he's quite another thing:

I wish he may hold out 'till Spring. Swift.

TO HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently.

Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hal'd out to murder. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Lu. xii. 58.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut,

And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

HALF-PIKE. n. f. [half and pike.] The small pike carried by officers.

The various ways of paying the salute with the half-pike. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 60.

HALF-PINT. n. f. [half and pint.] The fourth part of a quart.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine;

And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope's Horace.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. f. Imperfectly learned.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

HALF-SEAS over. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas o'er to death;

And since I must die once, I would be loth

To make a double work of what's half finish'd. Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

HALF-SPHERE. n. f. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots; and day,

At shewing but thy head forth, start away

From this half-sphere. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,

But mungril-mischievous; for my blood boil'd

To view this brutal act. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

HALF-SWORD. n. f. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he sees, who is with virtue crown'd,

The tempest rage, and hears the thunder sound;

Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:

Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath;

Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death. Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. f. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, so little and so light,

We scarce could know they live, but that they bite. Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgment of the women than of half-witted poets. Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surprised to find him in such a roguery. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

HALIBUT. n. f. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

HALIDOM. n. f. [halig dom, holy judgment, or halig and dame, for lady.] Our blessed lady.

By my halidom, quoth he,

Ye a great master are in your degree. Hubberd's Tale.

HALIMASS. n. f. [halig and mass.] The feast of All-souls.

My queen to France; from whence set forth in pomp,

She came adorned hither like sweet May;

Sent back like halimass, or shortest day. Shakesf. Rich. II.

HALITUOUS. adj. [halitus, Latin.] Vaporious; fumes.

We speak of the atmosphere as of a peculiar thin and halituous liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine. Boyle.

HALL. n. f. [hal, Saxon; halle, Dutch.]

1. A court of justice.

2. A manour-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate. Addison's Spectator.

3. The publick room of a corporation.

With expedition on the beadle call,

To summon all the company to the hall.

Garth.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall.

Shakespeare.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls

And courts of princes.

Milton.

HALLELU'JAH. n. f. [.הללויה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy faints

Unfained hallelujahs to Thee sing,

Hymns of high praise.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HA'LLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,

More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,

And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out. Dryden.

To HA'LLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.] To cry as after the dogs.

A number of country folks halloosed and houted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney, b. ii.

A cry more tuneable

Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakespeare.

To HA'LLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,

Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,

Though gout and age his speed detain,

Old John halloos his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chafe with shouts.

If I fly, Marcius,

Halloo me like a hare.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him,

Halloo the other.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

To HA'LLOW. v. a. [halgian, halig, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

With us it cannot be endured to hear a man openly profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakesf.

My prayers

Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes

More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes

Are all I can return.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

And from work

Now resting, blest'd and hallow'd the seventh day,

As resting on that day from all his works,

But not in silence holy kept.

Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,

And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden's Virgil.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;

But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granv.

2. To reverence as holy; hallow'd be thy name.

HALLUCINA'TION. n. f. [hallucinatio, Latin.] Errour; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a meer hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey on Consumptions.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addis. Spect.

HALM. n. f. [healm, Saxon.] Straw. Pronounced hawm.

HA'LO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

And, if the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton's Opt.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentrick to his body. Newton's Opt.

HA'LSENING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.]

Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue.

This ill halsening horny name hath, as cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many. Carew.

HA'LSER. n. f. [from hals, neck, and reel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow bafe

They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halsers hoise

Their white sails.

Chapman's Odyssey, b. ii.

No halsers need to bind these vessels here,

Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear. Dryd. Virg.

To HALT. v. n. [healte, Saxon, lame; healtan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will she yet debase her eyes

On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus? Shakesf. R. III.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,

Or wars of exil'd heirs, or foreign rage,

'Till halting vengeance overtook our age.

Dryden.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,

And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.

Pope.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.

How

H A M

- How long balt ye between two opinions? 1 Kings xviii.
4. To fail; to falter.
- Here's a paper written in his hand;
A balting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shakefp. Much Ado about Nothing.
All my familiars watched for my balting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jer.
- HALT. adj. [from the verb] Lame; crippled.
Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the balt, and the blind. Lu. xiv. 21.
- HALT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.
  2. [Alte, French.] A stop in a march.
The heav'nly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In Paradise, and on a hill made balt. Milt. Paradise Lost.
Scouts each coast light armed scour
Each quarter to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whether fled, or if for fight
In motion, or in balt. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Without any balt they marched between the two armies. Clarendon, b. viii.
He might have made a balt 'till his foot and artillery came up to him. Clarendon, b. ii.
- HA'ALTER. n. f. [from balt.] He who limps.
- HA'ALTER. n. f. [pealræpe, Saxon, from paly, the neck.]
1. A rope to hang malefactors.
He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shak. H. VI.
Answer was made, it was by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.
Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleaveland.
When the times begin to alter,
None rise so high as from the halter. Hudibras, p. iii.
He gets renown, who, to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden's Juvenal.
  2. A cord; a strong string.
Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge. Sandys.
- TO HA'ALTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.
He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Atterbury.
- TO HALVE. v. a. [from half, halves.] To divide into two parts.
- HALVES. interj. [from half, halves being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.
Have you not seen how the divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb?
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first. Cleaveland.
- HAM, whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon ham, a house, farm, or village. Gibson's Camden.
- HAM. n. f. [ham, Saxon; hamme, Dutch.]
1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.
The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining. Wiseman.
  2. The thigh of a hog salted.
Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham pye
Are no rewards for want and infamy. Pope's Horace.
- HA'MATED. adj. [hamatus, Latin.] Hooked; set with hooks.
- TO HA'MBLE. v. a. [from ham.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.
- HAME. n. f. [pama, Saxon.] The collar by which a horse draws in a waggon.
- HA'MLET. n. f. [ham, Saxon, and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.
Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.
He pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,
The country wasted and the hamlets burn'd. Dryden's Fables.
- HA'MMER. n. f. [pamer, Saxon; hammer, Danish.]
1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.
The armourers,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare's Henry V.
The stuff will not work well with a hammer. Bacon.
It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South's Sermons.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke. Dryd. Juv.
  2. Any thing destructive.
That renowned pillar of truth and hammer of heresies, St. Augustine. Hakewill on Providence.
- TO HA'MMER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To beat with a hammer.

H A N

- His bones the hammer'd steel in strength surpass. Sandys.
2. To forge or form with a hammer.
Some hammer helmets for the fighting field. Dryd. Æn.
Drudg'd like a smith, and on the anvil beat,
'Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate. Dryden's Juvenal.
I must pay with hammered money instead of milled. Dryden.
  3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour.
Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To humble down thy husband and thyself? Shakefp. H. VI.
He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this wicraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.
Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammered up the articles. Hayward.
- TO HA'MMER. v. n.
1. To work; to be busy.
Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering. Shakespeare.
I have been studying how to compare
This prison where I live unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on't. Shakespeare.
  2. To be in agitation.
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Sh. Tit. Andr.
- HA'MMERER. n. f. [from hammer.] He who works with a hammer.
- HA'MMERHARD. n. f. [hammer and hard.]
Hammerhard is when you harden iron or steel with much hammering on it. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- HA'MMOCK. n. f. [hamaca, Saxon.] A swinging bed.
Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life. Temple.
- HA'MPER. n. f. [Supposed by Minsheu to be contracted from band panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper.] A large basket for carriage.
What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!
What hampers full of bleeding hearts. Swift.
- TO HA'MPER. v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain; Junius observes that hamplyns in Teutonick is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]
1. To shackle; to entangle in chains.
O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing. Herbert.
We shall find such engines to assail,
And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force. Milton.
What was it but a lion hampered in a net! L'Estrange.
They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards. Tillotson's Sermons.
  2. To ensnare; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.
She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby. Shakefp.
Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;
Until they're hamper'd in the nooze,
Too fast to dream of breaking loose. Hudibras, p. iii.
  3. To complicate; to tangle.
Engend'ring heats, these one by one unbind,
Stretch their small tubes, and hamper'd nerves unwind. B'ac.
  4. To perplex; to embarrass by many lets and troubles.
And when th' are hamper'd by the laws,
Release the lab'ers for the cause. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.
- HA'MSTRING. n. f. [ham and string.] The tendon of the ham.
A strutting player, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue, and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage. Shakefp.
On the hinder side it is guarded with the two hamstrings. Wiseman's Surgery.
- TO HA'MSTRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. hamstrung. [from the noun.] To lame by cutting the tendon of the ham.
Hamstring'd behind, unhappy Gyges dy'd;
Then Phalaris is added to his side. Dryden's Æn.
- HAN for have, in the plural. Spenser.
- HA'NAPER. n. f. [hanaperium, low Latin.] A treasury; an exchequer. The clerk of the hanaper receives the fees due to the king for the seal of charters and patents.
The fines for all original writs were wont to be immediately paid into the hanaper of the Chancery. Bacon.
- HA'NCES. n. f. [In a ship.] Falls of the fife-rails placed on banisters on the poop and quarter-deck down to the gangway. Har.
- HANCES. [In architecture.] The ends of elliptical arches; and these are the arches of smaller circles than the scheme, or middle part of the arch. Harris.
The sweep of the arch will not contain above fourteen inches, and perhaps you must cement pieces to many of the courses in the hance, to make them long enough to contain fourteen inches. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- HAND,

HAND. n. f. [hand, hond, Saxon, and in all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The palm with the fingers; the member with which we hold or use any instrument.

They laid hands upon him, and bound him hand and foot.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

So hand in hand they pass'd, the loveliest pair
That ever since in love's embraces met. Milt. Parad. Lost.

They hand in hand, with wandering steps and flow,
Through Eden took their solitary way. Milton.

That wonderful instrument the hand, was it made to be idle?
Berkley.

2. Measure of four inches; a measure used in the matches of horses; a palm.

3. Side, right or left:
For the other side of the court-gate on this hand, and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits. Ex. xxxviii. 15.

4. Part; quarter; side.
It is allowed on all hands, that the people of England are more corrupt in their morals than any other nation this day under the sun. Swift.

5. Ready payment with respect to the receiver.
Of which offer the bassa accepted, receiving in hand one year's tribute. Knolles's History of the Turks.

These two must make our duty very easy; a considerable reward in hand, and the assurance of a far greater recompence hereafter. Tillotson's Sermons.

6. Ready payment with regard to the payer.
Let not the wages of any man tarry with thee, but give it him out of hand. Tob. iv. 14.

7. Rate; price.
Time is the measure of business, as money of wares: business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small dispatch. Bacon, Essay 26.

8. Terms; conditions.
With simplicity admire and accept the mystery; but at no hand by pride, ignorance, interest, or vanity wrest it to ignoble senses. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

It is either an ill sign or an ill effect, and therefore at no hand consistent with humility. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

9. Act; deed; external action.
Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand. King Charles.

10. Labour; act of the hand.
Alnaschar was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life. Addison's Spectator.

I rather suspect my own judgment than I can believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it. Addison.

11. Performance.
Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves? Y'ave made a fine band! fellows,
There's a trim rabble let in. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

12. Power of performance.
Will. Honeycomb has told me, that he had a great mind to try his hand at a Spectator, and that he would fain have one of his writing in my works. Addison's Spectator.

A friend of mine has a very fine hand on the violin. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 98.

13. Attempt; undertaking.
Out of them you dare take in hand to lay open the original of such a nation. Spenser on Ireland.

14. Manner of gathering or taking.
As her majesty hath received great profit, so may she, by a moderate band, from time to time reap the like. Bacon.

15. Workmanship; power or act of manufacturing or making.
An intelligent being, coming out of the hands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifferency to be reunited with its Author, the source of its utmost felicity, is such a shock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection. Cheyne.

16. Manner of acting or performing.
The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride. Dryden.

17. Agency; part in action.
God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an hand in. South.

18. The act of giving or presenting.
Let Tamar dress the meat in my sight, that I may eat it at her hand. 2 Sa. xiii. 5.

To-night the poet's advocate I stand,
And he deserves the favour at my hand. Addison.

19. Act of receiving any thing ready to one's hand, when it only waits to be taken.
His power reaches no farther than to compound and divide the materials that are made to his hand; but can do nothing towards the making or destroying one atom of what is already in being. Locke.

Many, whose greatness and fortune were not made to their hands, had sufficient qualifications and opportunities of rising to these high posts. Addison's Freeholder.

20. Care; necessity of managing.
Jupiter had a farm a long time upon his hands, for want of a tenant to come up to his price. L'Estrange.

When a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May duncy by duncy be whistled off my hands. Pope.

21. Discharge of duty.
Let it therefore be required, on both parts, at the hands of the clergy, to be in meanness of estate like the apostles; at the hands of the laity, to be as they who lived under the apostles. Hooker, Preface.

22. Reach; nearness: as, at hand, within reach, near, approaching.
Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet. Shakesp.

Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand
That chambers will be safe. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

23. Manual management.
Nor swords at hand, nor hissing darts afar,
Are doom'd to avenge the tedious bloody war. Dryd. Juven.

Where is our usual manager of mirth?
What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour? Shakespeare.

24. State of being in preparation.
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of war. Shakespeare.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

25. State of being in present agitation.
There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may term it, if he shall put to account that which may be hereafter, by the occupation and colonizing of those countries. Bacon.

A very great sound near hand hath stricken many deaf. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 128.

26. Cards held at a game.
It is not probable that any body should effect that at a distance, which, nearer hand, it cannot perform. Brown.

When mineral or metal is to be generated, nature needs not to have at hand salt, sulphur, and mercury. Boyle.

27. That which is used in opposition to another.
He would dispute,
Confute, change hands, and still confute. Hudibras, p. i.

28. Scheme of action.
Consult of your own ways, and think which hand is best to take. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

They who thought they could never be secure, except the king were first at their mercy, were willing to change the hand in carrying on the war. Clarendon, b. viii.

29. Advantage; gain; superiority.
The French king, supposing to make his hand by those rude ravages in England, broke off his treaty of peace, and proclaimed hostility. Hayward.

30. Competition; contest.
She in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world. Shakesp. K. Lear.

31. Transmission; conveyance; agency of conveyance.
The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Col. iv. 18.

32. Possession; power.
Sacraments serve as the moral instruments of God to that purpose; the use whereof is in our hands, the effect in his. Hooker.

And though you war, like petty wrangling states,
You're in my hand; and when I bid you cease,
You shall be crush'd together into peace. Dryden.

33. Pressure of the bridle.
Between the landlord and tenant there must be a quarter of the revenue of the land constantly in their hands. Locke.

It is fruitless pains to learn a language, which one may guess by his temper he will wholly neglect, as soon as an approach to manhood, setting him free from a governour, shall put him into the hands of his own inclination. Locke.

34. Method of government; discipline; restraint.
Vestigales Agri were lands taken from the enemy, and distributed amongst the soldiers, or left in the hands of the proprietors under the condition of certain duties. Arbutnot.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mett'e. Shakesp.

35. Menelaus bare an heavy band over the citizens, having a malicious mind against his countrymen. 2 Mac. v. 23.

He kept a strict band on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers. Bacon's Henry VII.

36. However

However strict a hand is to be kept upon all desires of fancy, yet in recreation fancy must be permitted to speak. Locke.

35. Influence; management.

Flattery, the dang'rous nurse of vice,
Got hand upon his youth, to pleasures bent. Daniel.

36. That which performs the office of a hand in pointing.

The body, though it moves, yet changing perceivable distance with other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our own minds do naturally follow one another, the thing seems to stand still; as is evident in the hands of clocks and shadows of sundials. Locke.

37. Agent; person employed.

The wisest prince, if he can save himself and his people from ruin, under the worst administration, what may not his subjects hope for when he changeth hands, and maketh use of the best? Swift.

38. Giver, and receiver.

This tradition is more like to be a notion bred in the mind of man, than transmitted from hand to hand through all generations. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

39. An actor; a workman; a soldier.

Your wrongs are known: impose but your commands,
This hour shall bring you twenty thousand hands. Dryd. n.

Demetrius appointed the painter guards for his security, pleased that he could preserve that hand from the barbarity and insolence of soldiers. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A dictionary containing a natural history requires too many hands, as well as too much time, ever to be hoped for. Locke.

40. Catch or reach without choice.

The men of Israel smote as well the men of every city as the beast, and all that came to hand. Judg. xx. 48.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf, Uncull'd as came to hand. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

41. Form or cast of writing.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd;
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over. Shakesp. Rich. III.
Solyman shewed him his own letters intercepted, asking him if he knew not that hand, if he knew not that seal. Knoll.
Being discovered by their knowledge of Mr. Cowley's hand,
I happily escaped. Denham, Dedication.

If my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must attend. Dryd. Juvenal.

Whether men write court or Roman hand, or any other, there is something peculiar in every one's writing. Cockburn.

The way to teach to write, is to get a plate graved with the characters of such hand you like. Locke.

Constantia saw that the hand writing agreed with the contents of the letter. Addison's Spectator.

I present these thoughts in an ill hand; but scholars are bad penmen: we seldom regard the mechanick part of writing. Felton on the Classics.

They were wrote on both sides, and in a small hand. Arbut.

42. HAND over head. Negligently; rashly; without seeing what one does.

So many strokes of the alarum bell of fear and awaking to other nations, and the facility of the titles, which, hand over head, have served their turn, doth ring the peal so much the louder. Bacon's War with Spain.

A country fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: thus 'tis, says a passenger, when people will be doing things hand over head, without either fear or wit. L'Estrange.

43. HAND to HAND. Close fight.

In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour. Shakesp. H. IV.
He issues, ere the fight, his dread command,
That flings afar, and poiniards hand to hand,
Be banish'd from the field. Dryden's Fables.

44. HAND in HAND. In union; conjointly.

HA'NDED. adj. [from hand.]

1. Having the use of the hand left or right.

Many are right handed, whose livers are weakly constituted; and many use the left, in whom that part is strongest. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

2. With hands joined.

Into their inmost bow'r

Handed they went. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

HA'NDER. n. f. [from hand.] Transmitter; conveyor in succession.

They would assume, with wond'rous art,
Themselves to be the whole, who are but part,
Of that vast frame the church; yet grant they were
The handers down, can they from thence infer
A right t' interpret? Or would they alone,
Who brought the present, claim it for their own? Dryden.

HA'NDFAST. n. f. [hand and fast.] Hold; custody. Obsolete.

If that shepherd be not in handfast, let him fly. Shakespeare.

HA'NDFUL. n. f. [hand and full.]

And said she would his handmaid poor remain. Fairfax.
I will never set politicks against ethicks, especially for that true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bac.
Heav'n's youngest teamed star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending. Milton.
Love led them on; and faith, who knew them best
Thy handmaids, clad them o'er with purple beams
And azure wings, that up they flew so drest,
And speak the truth of thee on glorious themes
Before the judge. Milton.
Those of my family their master slight,
Grown despicable in my handmaid's sight. Sandys.
By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings great;
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.
Since he had placed his heart upon wisdom, health, wealth, victory and honour should always wait on her as her handmaids. Addison's Guardian.
The great master will descend to hear
The humble series of his handmaid's care. Prior.
Then criticism the muse's handmaid prov'd,
To dress her charms and make her more belov'd. Pope.

HANDMILL. n. f. [hand and mill.] A mill moved by the hand.
Oft the drudging ass is driv'n with toil;
Returning late, and loaden home with gain
Of barter'd pitch, and handmills for the grain. Dryd. Virg.

HANDS OFF. A vulgar phrase for keep off; forbear.
They cut a stag into parts; but as they were entering upon the dividend, hands off, says the lion. L'Estrange's Fables.

HANDWRITING. n. f. [hand and writing.] A cast or form of writing peculiar to each hand.

That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show;
If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave me ink,
Your own handwriting would tell you what I think. Shak.

To no other cause than the wife providence of God can be referred the diversity of handwritings. Cockburn.

HANDY. adj. [from hand.]
1. Executed or performed by the hand.
Proudly vaunting, that although they were but few, yet they would easily overthrow the great numbers of them, if ever they came to handy blows. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

Both parties now were drawn so close,
Almost to come to handy blows. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

2. Ready; dexterous; skilful.
She stript the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and them with handy care she drest. Dryden.

The servants wash the platter, scour the plate;
And each is handy in his way. Dryden.

3. Convenient.
The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, and is more handy than the long jointer. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

HANDYDANDY. n. f. A play in which children change hands and places.

See how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief! Hark in thine ear: change places, and, handydandy, which is the justice, which is the thief. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handydandy. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

TO HANG. v. a. preter. and part. pass. hanged or hung, anciently hong. [hangen, Saxon.]

1. To suspend; to fasten in such a manner as to be sustained not below, but above.

Strangely visited people he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His great army is utterly ruined, he himself slain in it, and his head and right hand cut off, and hung up before Jerusalem. South's Sermons.

2. To place without any solid support.
Thou all things hast of nothing made,
That hung'st the solid earth in fleeting air,
Vein'd with clear springs, which ambient seas repair. Sandys.

3. To choke and kill by suspending by the neck, so as that the ligature intercepts the breath and circulation.
He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Hanging supposes human soul and reason;

This animal's below committing treason:

Shall he be hang'd, who never could rebel?

That's a preferment for Achitophel. Dryden.

Virgil has described hanging more happily than Homer.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

4. To display; to show aloft.
This unlucky mole mislaid several coxcombs; and, like the hanging out of false colours, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party. Addison.

5. To let fall below the proper situation; to decline.
There is a wicked man that hangeth down his head; but inwardly he is full of deceit. Ecclus. xix. 16.

The beauties of this place should mourn;
Th' immortal fruits and flow'rs at my return
Should hang their wither'd head; for sure my breath
Is now more pois'nous. Dryden's State of Innocence.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
White lilies hang their heads, and soon decay;
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

The cheerful birds no longer sing;
Each drops his head, and hangs his wing. Prior.

6. To fix in such a manner as in some directions to be moveable.
The gates and the chambers they renewed, and hanged doors upon them. 1 Mac. iv. 57.

7. To adorn by hanging upon.
Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night! Sh.

The pavement ever foul with human gore;
Heads and their mangled members hung the door. Dryden.

8. To furnish with ornaments or draperies fastened to the wall.
Musick is better in chambers wainscotted than hanged. Bac.

If e'er my pious father for my sake
Did grateful off'rings on thy altars make,
Or I increas'd them with my filvan toils,
And hung thy holy roofs with savage spoils,
Give me to scatter these. Dryden's Æn.

Sir Roger has hung several parts of his house with the trophies of his labours. Addison's Spectator.

TO HANG. v. n.

1. To be suspended; to be supported above, not below.
Over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong. Fairy Queen.

2. To depend; to fall loosely on the lower part; to dangle.
A tower full of ashes had a round instrument, which every side hanged down. 2 Mac. xiii. 5.

Upon her shoulders wings she wears
Like hanging sleeves, lin'd through with ears. Hudibras.

If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice,
And shakes in hanging sleeves the little box and dice. Dry.

3. To bend forward.
By hanging is only meant a posture of bending forward to strike the enemy. Addison.

4. To float; to play.
And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung. Prior.

5. To be supported by something raised above the ground.
Whatever is placed on the head may be said to hang; as we call hanging gardens such as are planted on the top of the house. Addison on Italy.

6. To rest upon by embracing.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Faustina is described in the form of a lady sitting upon a bed, and two little infants hanging about her neck. Peacham.

7. To hover; to impend.
With this strange virtue
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Odious names of distinction, which had slept while the dread of popery hung over us, were revived. Atterbury's Serm.

8. To be loosely joined.
Whither go you?
—To see your wife: is she at home?
—Ay, and as idle as she may hang together, for want of company. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

9. To drag; to be incommodiouly joined.
In my Lucia's absence
Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden. Addis. Cato.

10. To be compact or united.
In the common cause we are all of a piece; we hang together. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Your device hangs very well together; but is it not liable to the same exceptions you made to such explications as have nothing but the writer's imagination to support them? Addison.

11. To adhere.
A cheerful temper shines out in all her conversation, and dissipates dissipates those apprehensions which hang on the timorous or the modest, when admitted to her presence. Addison.

Shining landships, gilded triumphs, and beautiful faces, disperse that gloominess which is apt to hang upon the mind in those dark disconsolate seasons. Addison's Spectator.

12. To rest.

Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Two women, the babes hanging at their breasts, were cast headlong from the wall. 2 Mac. vi. 10.

Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life. Deut.

14. To be delayed; to linger.

A noble stroke he listed,

Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell

On the proud crest of Satan. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

She thrice essay'd to speak: her accents hung,

And fault'ring dy'd unfinish'd on her tongue. Dryden.

15. To be dependant on.

Oh, how wretched

Is that poor man that hangs on princes favours. Shakefp.

Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,

On whose just sceptre hangs Europa's scale. Prior.

16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.

Though wond'ring senates hung on all he spoke,

The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope's Epistles.

17. To have a steep declivity.

Suffex marl shews itself on the middle of the fides of hang- ing grounds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HANGING. n. f. [from hang.] A short broad sword.

HANGING-ON. n. f. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbræ, or hangers-on. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HANGING. n. f. [from hang.] Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,

Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,

And left me bare to weather. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,

So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,

And sumptuous feasts are made in splendid halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,

With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

HANGING. participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

What Ethiops lips he has!

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryd. Juven.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter.

HANGMAN. n. f. [hang and man.] The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

One cried, God bless us! and amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:

Liftening their fear, I could not say amen,

When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

Who makes that noise there? Who are you?

—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakefp. Meas. for Measure.

Men do not stand

In so ill case, that God hath with his hand

Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison's Whig Examiner.

HANK. n. f. [bank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tye; a check; an influence. A low word.

Do we think we have the bank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Decay of Piety.

To HANKER. v. n. [bankeren, Dutch.] To long importunately; to have an incessant wish.

And now the saints began their reign,

For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,

And felt such bowel hankerings,

To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a bankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange's Fables.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant bankers after something else. L'Estrange's Fables.

Do'st thou not banker after a greater liberty in some things?

If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always bankering after the diversions of the town. Addison's Spectator.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankerings after its ancient liberty. Addison on Italy.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.

That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ake: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addi.

HAP. n. f. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune]

1. Chance; fortune.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,

As through the flow'ring forest rash she fled,

In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,

And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. F. 2.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estr.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build

Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair

For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker, b. iv.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

Nor feared she among the bands to stray

Of armed men; for often had she seen

The tragick end of many a bloody fray:

Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax, b. vi.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge sake. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.

We live at haphazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them; and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

It will be too late to gather provision from abroad, for the furnishing of ships or soldiers, which peradventure may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser on Ireland.

Run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shak. Othello.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HAPPLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,

Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakespeare.

To warn

Us, haply too secure, of our discharge

From penalty, because from death releas'd

Some days. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,

Though that seems strange. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works

Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,

Him haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,

The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff

Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,

With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,

Moors by his side. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

HAPLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky. I Hapless

H A R

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakespeare.
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden's Æn.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.
To HA'PPEN. v. n. [from hap.]
1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.
Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Is. xl. 22.
Say not I have finned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclus. v. 4.
If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprized, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson's Sermons.
2. To light; to fall by chance.
I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]
1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.
Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakespeare.
Preferr'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.
Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.
2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.
3. In a state of felicity: as, he lives happily.
4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.
One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.
HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]
1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.
Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent fort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker, b. i.
Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.
The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.
2. Good luck; good fortune.
3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.
Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope on Criticism.
HA'PPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]
1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.
At other end Uran did Strephon lend
Her happy making hand. Sidney.
Am I happy in thy news?
—If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget you happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t' whose happy making fight alone,
When once our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us
happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.
2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.
Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.
Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.
3. Addressful; ready.
One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.
HA'QUETON. n. f. A piece of armour. Spenser.
HARA'NGUE. n. f. [harangue, French. The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of bearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour.
Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, oraner, aranger, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.
Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.
A multitude of preachers neglect method in their harangues.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

H A R

To HARA'NGUE. v. n. [haranguer, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.
HARA'NGUER. n. f. [from harangue.] An orator; a publick speaker: generally with some mixture of contempt.
To HA'RASS. v. a. [harasser, French, from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange.] To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness.
These troops came to the army but the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Bacon's War with Spain.
Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,
Sinks down to rest. Addison's Cato.
HA'RASS. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.
The men of Judah, to prevent
The harass of their land, beset me round. Milton's Agonist.
HA'RBINGER. n. f. [berberger, Dutch, one who goes to provide lodgings or an harbour for those that follow.] A forerunner; a precursor.
Make all our trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Sh. Macb.
I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach. Shak. Macb.
Sin, and her shadow death, and misery,
Death's harbinger. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 13.
And now of love they treat, 'till th' evening star,
Love's harbinger, appear'd. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.
Before him a great prophet, to proclaim
His coming, is sent harbinger, who all Invites. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. i.
As Ormond's harbinger to you they run;
For Venus is the promise of the Sun. Dryden.
HA'RBOUR. n. f. [berberge, French; herberg, Dutch; albergo,
Italian.]
1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.
For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryd. Fables.
Doubly curs'd
Be all those easy fools who give it harbour. Rowe's J. Shore.
2. A port or haven for shipping.
Three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shakes. Merch. of Ven.
They leave the mouths of Po,
That all the borders of the town o'erflow;
And spreading round in one continu'd lake,
A spacious hospitable harbour make. Addison on Italy.
3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of shelter and security.
To HA'RBOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To receive entertainment; to sojourn; to take shelter.
This night let's harbour here in York. Shakes. Henry VI.
They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shakes.
Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night:
Next morn they rose, and set up every sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale. Dryden.
Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and gilded roofs. Phillips.
To HA'RBOUR. v. a.
1. To entertain; to permit to reside.
My lady bids me tell you, that though she harbours you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shakespeare.
Knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakesp. King Lear.
Let not your gentle breast harbour one thought
Of outrage from the king. Rowe's Royal Convert.
We owe this old house the same kind of gratitude that we do to an old friend who harbours us in his declining condition, may even in his last extremities. Pope.
How people, so greatly warmed with a sense of liberty, should be capable of harbouring such weak superstition; and that so much bravery and so much folly can inhabit the same breasts. Pope.
2. To shelter; to secure.
Harbour yourself this night in this castle, because the time requires it; and, in truth, this country is very dangerous for murdering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Sidney.
HA'RBOURAGE. n. f. [berbergage, Fr. from harbour.] Shelter;
entertainment.
Let in us, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakesp. King John.
HA'RBOURER. n. f. [from harbour.] One that entertains another.
HARBOURLESS. adj. [from harbour.] Without harbour; without lodging; without shelter.
HARBROUGH for harbour. Spenser.
HARD.

HARD. adj. [hearb, Saxon; hard, Dutch.]

1. Firm; resisting penetration or separation; not soft; not easy to be pierced or broken.
 Repose you there, while I to the hard house,
 More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd;
 Which even but now, demanding after you,
 Denied me to come in. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. Difficult; not easy to the intellect.
 Some diseases, when they are easy to be cured, are hard to be known. Sidney, b. ii.

 As lords a spacious world, t' our native heav'n
 Little inferior, by my adventure hard
 With peril great atchiev'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
 Long is the way
 And hard, that out of hell leads up to light:
 Our prison strong. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 He now discerned he was wholly to be on the defensive, and that was like to be a very hard part too. Clarendon, b. viii.
 Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure, than fleshy ones. Wiseman on Inflammation.
 The love and pious duty which you pay,
 Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden's Æn.
4. Painful; distressful; laborious.
 Rachael travelled, and she had hard labour. Gen. xxxv. 16.
 Worcester's horse came but to-day;
 And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
 Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
 That not a horse is half of himself. Shakesp. Henry IV.
 Continual hard duty, with little fighting, lessened and diminished his army. Clarendon, b. viii.
 When Sebastian weeps, his tears
 Come harder than his blood. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 A man obliged to hard labour is not reduced to the necessity of having twice as much victuals as one under no necessity to work. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
5. Cruel; oppressive; rigorous.
 The bargain of Julius III. may be accounted a very hard one. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.
 Whom scarce my sheep, and scarce my painful plough,
 The needful aids of human life allow;
 So wretched is thy son, so hard a mother thou. Dryden.
 If you thought that hard upon you, we would not refuse you half your time. Dryden's Jnven. Dedication.
 It will be a loss to all those, who have their estates in money, of one third of their estates; which will be a very hard case upon a great number of people. Locke.
 No people live with more ease and prosperity than the subjects of little commonwealths; as, on the contrary, there are none who suffer more under the grievances of a hard government than the subjects of little principalities. Addison.
 Rough ungovernable passions hurry men on to say or do very hard or offensive things. Atterbury's Sermons.
 To find a bill that may bring punishment upon the innocent, will appear very hard. Swift.
6. Sower; rough; severe.

 Some hard rumours have been transmitted from t'other side the water, and rumours of the severest kind. Swift.
8. Insensible; untouched.
 If I by chance succeed
 In what I write, and that's a chance indeed,
 Know I am not so stupid, or so hard,
 Not to feel praise, or fame's deserv'd reward. Dryd. Perf.
9. Unhappy; vexatious.
 It is a very hard quality upon our soil or climate, that so excellent a fruit, which prospers among all our neighbours, will not grow here. Temple.
10. Vehement; keen; severe: as, a hard Winter.
11. Unreasonable; unjust.
 It is a little hard, that in an affair of the last consequence to the very being of the clergy, this whole reverend body should be the sole persons not consulted. Swift.
 It is the hardest case in the world, that Steele should take - up the reports of his faction, and put them off as additional fears. Swift.

12. Forced; not easily granted.
 If we allow the first couple, at the end of one hundred years, to have left ten pair of breeders, which is no hard supposition; there would arise from these, in fifteen hundred years, a greater number than the earth was capable of. Burnet.
  13. Powerful.
 The stag was too hard for the horse, and the horse flies for succour to one that's too hard for him, and rides the one to death, and outright kills the other. L'Esrange's Fables.
 Let them consider the vexation they are treasuring up for themselves, by struggling with a power which will be always too hard for them. Addison's Freeholder.
 A disputant, when he finds that his adversary is too hard for him, with slyness turns the discourse. Watts.
  14. Austere; rough, as liquids.
 In making of vinegar, set vessels of wine over against the noon sun, which calleth out the more oily spirits, and leaveth the spirit more four and hard. Bacon's Natural History.
  15. Harsh; stiff; constrained.
 Others, scrupulously tied to the practice of the ancients, make their figures harder than even the marble itself. Dryden.
 His diction is hard, his figures too bold, and his tropes, particularly his metaphors, insufferably strained. Dryden.
  16. Not plentiful; not prosperous.

Some harlot's spirit. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots. Ben. Jonns.

The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;

Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryd. Juven.

HA'RLOTRY. n. f. [from harlot.]

1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Nor shall,

From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail

'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin. Dryd. Juven.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-will'd harlotry,

That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakesp. Henry IV.

HARM. n. f. [hearm, Saxon.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,

Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers

Deny us for our good. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harms way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.

TO HARM. v. a. To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?

I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shak. Othello.

Passions ne'er could grow

To harm another, or impeach your rest. Waller.

After

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them.

HA'RMFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.

His dearly loved squire

His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,

Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,

Had riven many a breast with pike-head square. Fa. Queen.

Let no man fear that harmful creature less, because he fees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh's History.

For flax and oats will burn the tender field,

And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield. Dryden's Georg.

HA'RMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

HA'RMFULNESS. n.f. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HA'RMLESS. adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.

Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newliest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting

Each object with a joy. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. Unhurt; undamaged.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh's Essays.

HA'RMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HA'RMLESSNESS. n.f. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,

In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,

'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falshood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged long-practised sinner. South.

HA'RMONICAL. adj. [ἀρμονικός; harmonique, French.] Pro-

HA'RMONICK. s portioned to each other; adapted to each other; concordant; musical.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all har- monical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon's N. Hist.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon's Natural History.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as,

Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

HARMO'NIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, French, from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other.

All the wide-extended sky,

And all th' harmonious worlds on high,

And Virgil's sacred work shall dye. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical.

Harmony in wedded pair,

More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

HA'RMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruised;

But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:

Where order in variety we see,

And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not therefore to worship the instrument, but him that makes the musick.

Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

HARMO'NIOUSNESS. n.f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

To HA'RMONIZE. v.a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,

The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

HA'RMONY. n.f. [ἀρμονία; harmonie, French.]

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.

The harmony of things,

As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Denham.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Cheyne.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united. Watts's Logick.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both one soul,

Harmony to behold in wedded pair!

More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,

My heart, which by a secret harmony

Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton.

HARNESS. n.f. [harnois, French, supposed from iern or hiern, Runnick; biairn, Welsh and Erse, iron.]

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,

That from his head no place appeared to his feet. F. Queen.

Doff thy harness, youth:

I am to-day i' th' vein of chivalry. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

Of no right, nor colour like to right,

He doth fill fields with harness. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:

Great men should drink with harness on their throats. Shak.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state: of other carriages we say geer.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,

Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Shakespeare.

Their steeds around,

Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

To HA'RNESSE. v.a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.

He was harnest light, and to the field goes he. Shakesp.

Full fifty years, harnest'd in rugged steel,

I have endur'd the biting Winter's blast. Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the door her iron chariot stood,

All ready harnessed for journey new. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Harness the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Fer. xlvii. 4.

When I plow my ground, my horse is harnessed and chained to my plough. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To the harnessed yoke

They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARP. n.f. [hearp, Saxon; harpe, French. It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

Romanusq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests cruel wreck

He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,

Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,

Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hyming prais'd

God and his works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire,

The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies

The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;

This when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks

He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech's Manilus.

To HARP. v.n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped. 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

The helmed cherubim,

And sworded seraphim,

Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,

Harping in loud and solemn quire,

With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.

I conceive you harp a little too much upon one string.

Collier on Pride.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,

Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason

H A R

For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.
Macbeth, beware Macduff!

Beware the thane of Fife: dismiss me: enough.
—Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He seems

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

HA'RPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.
Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shakespeare.
I'm the god of the harp: stop, my fairest:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HA'RPING Iron. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPONE'ER. n. f. [harpeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPO'ON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HA'RPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument.

HA'RPY. n. f. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, harpye, French.]

The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HA'RQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun.

HA'RQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebuis.] One armed with a harquebuis.

About thirty paces off were placed twenty thousand nimble
harquebussiers, ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knolles.

HARRIDA'N. n. f. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HA'RRROW. n. f. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.]
A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden's Georgick.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HA'RRROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break with the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy peafon, but also thy beans. Tuff. Husbandry.
Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow?
or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job xxxix. 10.

Let the Volscians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never Be such a gosling to obey instinct. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Sh.
Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

3. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From pengian, Saxon.]

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stowre,
The faulty souls thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 10.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser's Sonnets.

5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakesp.

H A R

Amaz'd I flood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;

What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HA'RRROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

HA'RROWER. n. f. [from barrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

To HA'RRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To teaze; to hare; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.

—I repent me much

That I so harry'd him. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [hervische, German, Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:

So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear. Denham.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine

Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now

With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon's Henry VII.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;

Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise. Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Rugged to the touch.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle on Colours.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;

Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryd.

HA'RSHLY. adj. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripely.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Ruggedly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:

I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,

Grating so harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakesp. Hamlet.

A hollow groan, a murm'ring wind arose;

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,

Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd. Fables.

HA'RSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bac.n.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

'Tis

H A R

- 'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.
3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch
Bacon's Natural History.
4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
No, Regan, you shall never have my curse:
Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakesp. King Lear.
- HART. n. f. [heort, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind;
the male of the roe.
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
- The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil's Georg.
- HA'RTSHORN. n. f.
Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica.
What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag, called the red deer. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorifick, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill's Mat. Med.
- Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward on Fossils.
- HA'RTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
- HA'RT-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.
- HA'RTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.
It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.
- Hartstongue* is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- HA'RTWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.] It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of five unequal heart-fashioned petals, which are placed circularly and rest on the empalement, which afterward becomes an almost round fruit, composed of two flat seeds, which easily cast off their covering with a raised border, which are commonly indented.
It is an annual plant, and perishes soon after it has perfected its seed. It is found wild in several parts of England. Miller.
- HA'RVEST. n. f. [hærferz, Saxon.]
1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.
As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
With harvest work he is worse than he was in the Spring.
L'Estrange.
  2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shak. H. VI.
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.
  3. The product of labour.
Let these small cotts and hills suffice:
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden's Juven.
- HA'RVEST-HOME. n. f.
1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden's K. Arthur.
  2. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little barrel. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 4.
  3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife seems to be well favoured: I will use it as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
- HA'RVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.
Grant harvest-lord more by a peny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuss. Husbandry.
- HA'RVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.
- HA'RVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.
Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

H A S

- To HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.
He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras, p. i.
- What have they to complain of but too great variety, tho' some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness; but hashed up in haste. Garth.
- HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags.
Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser's Pastorals.
- HA'SLET. } n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a bundle; hasterel, has- HA'RSLET. } tereau, hastier, French.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.
- HASP. n. f. [hæpp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.
Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.
- HA'SSOCK. n. f. [hasseck, German. Skinner.]
1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.
He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.
  2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hask are the same.
- HAST. The second person singular of have.
- HASTE. n. f. [haste, French; hæste, Dutch.]
1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.
Spare him, death!
Let not pity with her tears
Keep such distance from thine ears:
But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.
In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.
  2. Passion; vehemence.
I said in my haste, all men are liars. Pf. cxvi. ii.
- To HASTE. } v. n. [haster, French; hæsten, Dutch.]
- To HA'STEN. }
1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.
I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jer.
  2. To move with swiftness.
'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so? Shakespeare.
They were troubled and hasted away. Pf. xlviii. 5.
All those things are passed away like a shadow, and as a post that hasted by. Wisd. v. 9.
Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.
These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden's Æn.
To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope's Odyssey.
Soon as the sun awakes the sprightly court,
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.
- To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward; to urge on; to pre-
To HA'STEN. } cipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.
Let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
All hopes of succour from your arms is past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.
Each sees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space;
Nor hastens, nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.
- HA'STENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.
- HA'STILY. adj. [from hasty.]
1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.
A voice, that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Fa. Queen.
If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.
The next to danger, hot pursu'd by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.
  2. Rashly; precipitately.
Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.
  3. Passionately; with vehemence.
- HASTINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.
A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilus. Sidney, b. i.
2. Hurry; precipitation.
There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker, Preface.
The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.
3. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.
HA'STINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.
The large white and green hastings are not to be set 'till the cold is over. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- HA'STY. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; haestig, Dutch.]
1. Quick; speedy.
Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.
2. Passionate; vehement.
He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Prov. xiv. 29.
3. Rash; precipitate.
Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov. xxix. 20.
Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccl. v. 2.
4. Early ripe.
Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the Summer. Is. xxviii. 4.
- HA'STY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.
Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Dorset.
- HAT. n. f. [hæt, Saxon; hatt, German.] A cover for the head.
She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Out of meer ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shak. H. VIII.
His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montera, Bacon.
Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.
- HA'TBAND. n. f. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.
They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden's Juven.
- HA'TCASE. n. f. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.
I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison's Spectator.
- TO HATCH. v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from heghen, eghen, æg, egg, Saxon.]
1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.
When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray on the Creation.
He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing Spring. Denham.
The tepid caves, and fens and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
2. To quicken the egg by incubation.
Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison's Spectator.
3. To produce by precedent action.
4. To form by meditation; to contrive.
Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arrians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.
5. [From hacher, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.
Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapm. Iliads.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in bras; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears

- To his experienc'd tongue. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.
Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
- TO HATCH. v. n.
1. To be in the state of growing quick.
He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.
  2. To be in a state of advance towards effect.
HATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
  1. A brood excluded from the egg.
  2. The act of exclusion from the egg.
  3. Disclosure; discovery.
Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
  4. [Hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] The half door; the opening over the door.
Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shakesp. K. John.
  5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shakespeare's Tempest.
There she's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shakesp. Tempest.
So seas, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.
A ship was fasten'd to the shore;
The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And skip'd and sculk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.
  6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.
He assures us how this fatherhood began in Adam, continued its course 'till the flood, got out of the ark with Noah, made and supported all the kings of the earth, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.
  7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.
  - TO HA'TCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, German.] To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.
This asbestos seems different from that mentioned by Kircher in his description of China; which he says, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his mundus subterraneus. Woodward on Fossils.
  - HA'TCHEL. n. f. [from the verb; hachel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.
  - HA'TCHELLER. n. f. [from hachel.] A beater of flax.
  - HA'TCHET. n. f. [hache, hachette, French; ascia, Latin] A small axe.
The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of pieces of stuff. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
His harmful hatchet he hent in his hand,
And to the field he speedeth. Spenser's Pastorals.
Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and halters strong,
Swords, spears, twice dipt in the dire stains
Of brothers blood. Crasshaw.
Tyrrheus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.
Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet; and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor. Addison's Freeholder.
  - HA'TCHET-FACE. n. f. An ugly face; such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.
An ape his own dear image will embrace;
An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face. Dryden.
  - HA'TCHMENT. n. f. [Corrupted from atchievement. See AT-CHIEVEMENT.] Armorial escutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.
His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
  - HA'TCHWAY. n. f. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.
  - TO HATE. v. a. [hātian, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.
You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.
—I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly,
Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me. Shak. Hen. IV.
Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
—Ev'ry offence is not a hate at first. Shakespeare.
Those old inhabitants of thy holy land thou hatest for doing most odious works. Wisd. xii. 4.
But

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords bate, methinks we two may love. Dryden.
HATE. n. f. [bate, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your bate. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more,
Whom Mincius from his fire Benacus bore. Dryden's Æn.
Nausicaa teaches that the afflicted are not always the objects of divine bate. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HA'TEFUL. adj. [bate and full.]

1. That which causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth.

—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More bateful to mine ear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
There is no vice more bateful to God and man than ingratitude. Peacham.

What owe I to his commands
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
To sit in bateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nly born? Milt. Par. Lost.
I hear the tread

Of bateful steps: I must be viewless now. Milton.

But Umbriel, bateful gnome! forbears not so;

He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow. Pope.

2. Abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon, compell'd

No more to try the fortune of the field;

And, worse than death, to view with bateful eyes

His rival's conquest, and renounce the prize. Dryden.

HA'TEFULLY. adv. [from bateful.]

1. Odiously; abominably.

2. Malignantly; maliciously.

All their hearts stood batefully appaid

Long since. Chapman's Iliads.

They shall deal with thee batefully, take away all thy labour, and leave thee naked and bare. Ezek. xxiii. 29.

HA'TEFULNESS. n. f. [from bateful.] Odiousness.

HA'TER. n. f. [from bate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her understood of that most noble constancy in my lord Argalus; which whosoever loves not, shews himself to be a bater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind. Sidney.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,

He was my master, and I wore my life

To spend upon his baters. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleopatra.

An enemy to God, and a bater of all good. Brown.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an bater of God, and a covenant-breaker. South.

HA'TRED. n. f. [from bate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us. Locke.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the com-pafs of its proper object. South's Sermons.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated and continued in the world. Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able. Wake's Preparat. for Death.

She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church. Swift.

TO HA'TTER. v. a. [Perhaps corrupted from batter.] To harass; to weary; to wear out with fatigue.

He's batter'd out with penance.

Dryden.

HA'TTER. n. f. [from hat.] A maker of hats.

A batter sells a dozen of hats for five shillings a piece. Swift.

HA'TTOCK. n. f. [attock, Erse.] A shock of corn. Dict.

HAU'BERK. n. f. [hauberg, old French.] A coat of mail; a breastplate.

Him on the hauberk struck the princess fore,

That quite disparted all the linked frame,

And pierced to the skin. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound;

The mighty maces with such haste descend,

They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

TO HAVE. v. a. pret. and part. pass. had. [haban, Gothick;
pabban, Saxon; hebben, Dutch; avoir, French; avere, Ital.]

1. Not to be without.

I have brought him before you, that after examination had

I might have something to write. Acts xxv. 26.

2. To carry; to wear.

Upon the mast they saw a young man, who sat as on horseback, having nothing upon him. Sidney.

3. To make use of.

I have no Levite to my priest. Judg. xvii. 13.

4. To possess.

He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ex. xvi. 18.

5. To bear; to carry; to be attended with or united to, as an accident or concomitant.

I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean;
nor believe he can have every thing in him, by wearing his apparel neatly. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

6. To obtain; to enjoy.

Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. Jo. xvii. 5.

7. To take; to receive.

A secret happiness, in Petronius, is called curiosa felicitas, and which I suppose he had from the felicitate audere of Horace. Dryden.

8. To be in any state.

Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow? 1 Sa. xxi. 15.

9. To put; to take.

With tossing and raking, and setting on cox,

Grass lately in swathes is meat for an ox;

That done, go and cart it, and have it away. Tuss. Husb.

10. To procure; to find.

I would fain have any one name to me that tongue, that any one can speak as he should do, by the rules of grammar.
Locke on Education.

11. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst: Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:

Laws are explain'd by men; so have a care. Pope.

12. To hold; to regard.

Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour. 2 Sa. vi. 22.

The proud have had me greatly in derision. Psf. cxix. 51.

13. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves. Bacon's Natural History.

14. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

15. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?

First they would bribe us without pence,

Deceive us without common sense,

And without pow'r enslave.

Dryden.

16. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. Shakespeare.

17. To be engaged, as in a task.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Hooker, b. i. f. 1.

The Spaniards captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers pay. Spenser on Ireland.

You did set your course to treat of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, among which that of the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand. Spenser on Ireland.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants and their commons. Bacon's Essays.

18. To wish; to desire.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Psf. lxxxiv. 10.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him. Addison.

19. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and artfulness, we should have them much cheaper. Collier on human Reason.

20. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses. Have the preterperfect, and had the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words enow between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Cong.

I have heard one of the greatest genius's this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is impossible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Addison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addison.

This observation we have made on man. Addison.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.

There torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

It has been finely improved by many divines. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it. Addison.

21. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shak. Henry IV. p. ii.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I never was out at a mad frolick, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HA'VEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre, French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a safe station for ships.

Only love was threatened and promised to him, and so to his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney, b. ii.

Order for sea is given:

They have put forth the haven. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.

After an hour and a half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd,

The navy under sail, the haven clear'd. Denham.

We may be shipwreckt by her breath:

Love, favour'd once with that sweet gale,

Doubles his haste, and fills his sail,

'Till he arrive, where she must prove

The haven, or the rock of love. Waller.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of heaven visits,

Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Shakesp. R. II.

HA'VENER. n. f. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers, as receiver, havener, and customer. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HA'VER. n. f. [from have.] Possessor; holder.

Valour is the chiefest virtue, and

Most dignifies the haver. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

HA'VER is a common word in the northern counties for oats: as, haver bread for oaten bread.

When you would anneal, take a blue stone, such as they make haver or oat cakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

HAUGHT. adj. [haut, French.]

1. Haughty; insolent; proud; contemptuous; arrogant.

The proud insulting queen,

With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,

Have wrought the easy melting king, like wax. Shakesp.

No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man;

Nor no man's lord. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. High; proudly magnanimous.

His courage haught,

Desir'd of foreign foemen to be known,

And far abroad for strange adventures fought. Fairy Queen.

HAUGHTILY. adv. [from haughty.] Proudly; arrogantly; contemptuously.

Her heav'nly form too haughtily she priz'd;

His person hated, and his gifts despis'd. Dryden.

HAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from haughty.] Pride; arrogance; the quality of being haughty.

By the head we make known our supplications, our threatenings, our mildness, our haughtiness, our love, and our hatred. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

HAUGHTY. adj. [hautaine, French.]

1. Proud; lofty; insolent; arrogant; contemptuous.

His wife, being a woman of a haughty and imperious nature, and of a wit superior to his, quickly resented the disrespect she received from him. Clarendon, b. viii.

I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,

And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,

In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate. Dryd. Æn.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:

Her goodness takes our liberty away;

And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway. Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous.

Who now shall give me words and sound

Equal unto this haughty enterprize?

Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground

My lowly verse may loftily arise? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HA'VING. n. f. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune.

My having is not much;

I'll make division of my present with you:

Hold, there's half my coffer. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side was alleged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the shield. Sidney.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,

Where none will sweat but for promotion;

And having that, do choak their service up,

Even with the having. Shakesp. As you like it.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Poinz: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

HA'VIOUR. n. f. [for behaviour.] Conduct; manners.

Their ill haviour garres men mislay

Both of their doctrines and their fay. Spenser's Pastorals.

TO HAUL. v. a. [haler, French, to draw.] To pull; to draw; to drag by violence. A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and, to persons, awkwardness or rudeness.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance and contagious prison,

Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The youth with songs and rhimes,

Some dance, some haul the rope. Denham.

Some the wheels prepare,

And fasten to the horses feet; the rest

With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast. Dryden's Æn.

In his grandeur he naturally chuses to haul up others after him whose accomplishments most resemble his own. Swift.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;

The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Pope's Odyssey.

While romp-loving misfs

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson's Autumn.

HAUL. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull; violence in dragging.

The leap, the flap, the haul; and shook to notes

Of native musick, the respondent dance. Thomson's Winter.

HAUM. n. f. [or hame, or halm; pealm, Saxon; halm, Dutch and Danish.] Straw.

In champion countrie a pleasure they take

To mow up their haume for to brew and to bake:

The haume is the straw of the wheat or the rie,

Which once being reaped, they mow by and by. Tusser.

Having stripped off the haum or binds from the poles, as you pick the hops, stack them up for their security in Winter.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

HAUNCH. n. f. [hancke, Dutch; hanche, French; anca, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hind hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind,

Whose right haunch earst my stedfast arrow strake?

If thou didst, tell me. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 3:

To make a man able to teach his horse to stop and turn quick, and to rest on his haunches, is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Locke.

2. The rear; the hind part.

O Westmorland, thou art a Summer bird,

Which ever in the haunch of Winter sings

The lifting up of day. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

TO HAUNT. v. a. [hanter, French.]

1. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears. Sidney.

Now we being brought known unto her, the time that we spent in curing some very dangerous wounds, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, she continually almost haunted us. Sidney.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,

Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shak. Hen. IV.

She this dang'rous forest haunts,

And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now

Secur'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,

Or wander with delight, and love to haunt

Her sacred shades. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;

Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope's Spring.

2. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;

I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shakespeare.

Oh, could I see my country-seat!

There leaning near a gentle brook,

Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;

And there in sweet oblivion drown

Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

3. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions break my sleep by night. Fairfax.
All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.
To HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.
I've charged thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee. Shakespeare's Othello.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
HAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Place in which one is frequently found.
We set toils, nets, gins, snares and traps for beasts and birds in their own haunts and walks, and without any seal of faith and confidence. L'Estrange.
To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his way,
Where he would dwell, or whither stray. Prior.
A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope's Odyss.
2. Habit of being in a certain place.
The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary. Arbutn. John Bull.
HA'UNTER. n. f. [from haunt.] Frequent; one that is often found in any place.
The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes. Wotton on Education.
O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies. Dryden's Fables.
HA'VOCK. n. f. [hafog, Welsh, devastation.] Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.
Having been never used to have any thing of their own, and now being upon spoil of others, they make no spare of any thing, but havock and confusion of all they meet with.
Spenser on Ireland.
Saul made havock of the church. Acts viii. 3.
Ye gods, what havock does ambition make Among your works! Addison's Cato.
The Rabbins, to express the great havock which has been made of them, tells us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea. Addison's Spectator.
If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater havock than any history mentions. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
HA'VOCK. interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter.
Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry havock, kings! Shakesp. King John.
Até by his side,
Cries havock! and lets loose the dogs of war. Shakespeare.
To HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy;
to lay waste.
Whatsoever they leave, the soldier spoileth and havocketh likewise; so that, between both, nothing is very shortly left.
Spenser's State of Ireland.
See! with what heat these dogs of hell advance,
To waste and havock yonder world, which I
So fair and good created! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
HA'UTBOY. n. f. [haut and bois.] A wind instrument.
I saw it, and told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have truss'd him and all his apparel into an eel-skin: the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court; and now hath he land and beeves. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes. Dry.
HA'UTBOY Strawberry. See STRAWBERRY.
HAW. n. f. [haz, Saxon.]

Now sow and go harrow, where ridge ye did draw
The seed of the bremble with kernel and haw. Tusser.
Years of store of haws and hips commonly portend cold
Winters. Bacon's Natural History.
His quarrel to the hedge was, that his thorns and his bram-bles did not bring forth raisins, rather than haws and blackberries. L'Estrange.
2. An excrescence in the eye.
3. [haga, Saxon; haw, a garden, Danish.] A small piece of ground adjoining to an house. In Scotland they call it haugh.
Upon the haw at Plymouth is cut out in the ground the portraiture of two men, with clubs in their hands, whom they term Gog and Magog. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
HA'WTHORN. n. f. [hæz þorn, Saxon.] A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws.
The great use to which it is applied in England is to make hedges and fences; and there are two or three varieties of it about London; but that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together. Miller.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles. Shak. As you like it.
The hawthorn fly is all black, and not big. Walton's Angler.
Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine, or of hawthorn held. Dryden.
Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring. Pope.
The hawthorn whitens, and the juicy groves
Put forth their buds. Thomson's Spring.
To HAW. v. n. [Perhaps corrupted from hawk or hack.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.
'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and haw- ing upon't, he agreed to undertake the job. L'Estrange.
HAWK. n. f. [hæbez, Welsh; hæroc, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.
Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to cut his hawk's meat. Peacham on Drawing.
Whence borne on liquid wing
The sounding culver shoots; or where the hawk,
High in the beetling cliff, his airy builds. Thomson's Spring.
2. [Hoch, Welsh.] An effort to force phlegm up the throat.
To HAWK. v. n. [from hawk.]
1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk.
'Tis his highness' pleasure
You do prepare to ride unto St. Alban's,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Shakespeare.
Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark. Shakespeare.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking
and hunting. Locke.
He that hawks at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game. Locke.
A fal'ner Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.
2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.
A falcon tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd. Shakesp. Macb.
Whether upward to the moon they go,
Or dream the Winter out in caves below,
Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dry.
3. [Hoch, Welsh.] To force up phlegm with a noise.
Come, fit, fit, and a song.—Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice. Shakespeare.
She complained of a soreness of her throat, and of a stinking tough phlegm which she hawked up in the mornings.
Wiseman's Surgery.
Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting. Harvey on Consumpt.
4. To sell by proclaiming it in the streets. [From hock, German, a salesman.]
His works were hawk'd in ev'ry street;
But seldom rose above a sheet. Swift.
HA'WKED. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.
Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HA'WKER. n. f. [from hock, German.] One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street.
I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought and watching, bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the weighty consideration of the greatest person.
Swift's Vindication of Isaac Bickerstaff.
To grace this honour'd day the queen proclaims,
By herald hawkers, high heroick games:
She summons all her sons; an endless band
Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land. Pope.
HA'WKWEED. n. f.
The characters are: the stalks are branched and slender, the leaves produced alternately, and the flower consists of many leaves placed in an orbicular order, and open in form of a marigold: the seeds are slender and angular, or furrowed:
the whole plant hath a milky juice. Oxtongue is a species of this plant. Miller.
HA'WSES. n. f. [of a ship.] Two round holes under the ship's head or beak, through which the cables pass when she is at anchor. Harris.
HAY. n. f. [hæg, hæg, Saxon; hey, Dutch.] Grass dried to fodder cattle in Winter.
Make hay while the sun shines. Camden's Remains.
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears. Shakesp.
We have heats of dungs, and of hays and herbs laid up moist. Bacon's New Atlantis.
The

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd bay cock in the mead. Milt. n.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and ofiars cut,
Nor all the Winter long thy bay rick shut. May's Virgil.
Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an bay stalk, Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The best manure for meadows is the bottom of bay mows and bay stacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale. Swift.

By some bay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn. Dryden.
Blouzelinda, in a gamefome mood,
Behind a bay cock loudly laughing stood. Gay's Pastorals.
The hum of bees inviting sleep sincere;
Into the guiltless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid' the fragrant bay. Thomf. Autumn.
To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock.

I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the bay. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,
There dancing bays by two and three,
Just as your fancy casts them. Drayton's Nymphid.
The gum and glist'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down the heart,
Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the bay. Suckling.

HAY. n. f. [from haie, French, a hedge.] A net which incloses the haunt of an animal.

Coneys are destroyed by bays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HA'YMAKER. n. f. [bay and make.] One employed in drying grafs for hay.

As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here, you might enquire of his baymakers. Pope to Swift.

HA'ZARD. n. f. [hazard, French; azar, Spanish; haski, Ru-nick, danger.]

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakefp. Rich. III.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shak.
Where the mind does not perceive this connection, there mens opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard; of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker, b. i.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers's Sermons.

3. A game at dice.

The duke playing at hazard at the groom-porter's, in much company, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.

To HA'ZARD. v. a. [hazarder, French.] To expose to chance;
to put into danger.

They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker, b. v.

It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.

To HA'ZARD. v. n.

1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

2. To adventure.

She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.

HA'ZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturesome; liable to chance.

An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indisferent effects, to affix a positive type or period. Brown.

HA'ZARDER. n. f. [from hazard.] He who hazards.

HA'ZARDRY. n. f. [from hazard.] Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

Hasty wrath, and heedless hazardry,
Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy.

Fairy Queen.

HA'ZARDOUS. adj. [hazardous, Fr. from hazard.] Dangerous; exposed to chance.

Grant that our hazardous attempt prove vain,
We feel the worst, secur'd from greater pain. Dryden.

HA'ZARDOUSLY. adv. [from hazardous.] With danger or chance.

Ainsworth.

HA'ZEL. n. f. [hæzel, Saxon; corylus, Latin.]

It hath male flowers growing at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out: the leaves are roundish and intire.
The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.

Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakespeare.

Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.

There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward on Fossils.

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.
2. The first brick in the angle.
If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- HE'ADGARGLE. n. f. [head and gargle.] A disease, I suppose, in cattle.
For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek. Mortimer.
- HE'ADINESS. n. f. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.
- HE'ADLAND. n. f. [head and land.]
1. Promontary; cape.
An heroick play ought to be an imitation of an heroick poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these Sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps, with headlands and promontories. Dryden.
2. Ground under hedges.
Now down with the grafs upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout. Tusser.
- HE'ADLESS. adj. [from head.]
1. Without an head; beheaded.
His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place. Fairy Queen.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks. Shak. H. VI.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
2. Without a chief.
They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh's Essays.
3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for heedless.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.
- HE'ADLONG. adj.
1. Rash; thoughtless.
2. Sudden; precipitate.
It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which, many examples having taught them, never stopt his race 'till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney, b. ii.

HE'ADLONG. adv. [head and long.]

1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.

I'll look no more,

Left my brain turn, and the deficient sight

Topple down headlong. Shakesf. King Lear.

Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore

His course from Africk to the Latian shore,

Fell headlong down. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,

And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings. Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.

To give Ahab such warning, as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was esteemed by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good. South's Sermons.

Some ask for envy'd pow'r, which publick hate

Pursues and hurries headlong to their fate;

Down go the titles. Dryden's Juv. Sat. x.

3. Hastily; without delay or respite.

Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!

Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb. Dryden.

4. It is very negligently used by Shakespeare.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels

Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shakesf. H. VI.

HE'ADMOULD-SHOT. n. f. [head, mould, and shot.] This is when the futures of the skull, generally the coronal, ride; that is, have their edges shot over one another; which is frequent in infants, and occasions convulsions and death. Quincy.

HE'ADPIECE. n. f. [head and piece.]

1. Armour for the head; helmet; morion.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly intreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney, b. ii.

The word is giv'n; with eager speed they lace

The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace. Dryden.

Another reason for this fiction was their wearing a headpiece, or martial vizor, that had but one sight through it. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

This champion will not be in such haste to come into the field, before his great blunderbuss can be got ready, his old rusty breastplate scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended. Swift.

2. Understanding; force of mind.

'Tis done by some severals

Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes

Perchance are to this business purblind. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains. Prideaux.

HE'ADQUARTERS. n. f. [head and quarters.] The place of general rendezvous, or lodgment for soldiers.

Those spirits, posted upon the out-guards, immediately scour off to the brain, which is the headquarters, or office of intelligence, and there they make their report. Collier.

HE'ADSHIP. n. f. [from head.] Dignity; authority; chief place.

HE'ADSMAN. n. f. [head and man.] Executioner; one that cuts off heads.

Rods broke on our associates bleeding backs,

And headsmen lab'ring 'till they blunt their ax? Dryden.

HE'ADSTALL. n. f. [head and stall.] Part of the bridle that covers the head.

His horse near legg'd before, and with a half-cheek'd bit, and a headstall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakesf. Taming of the Shrew.

HE'ADSTONE. n. f. [head and stone.] The first or capital stone.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Pf. cxviii. 24.

HE'ADSTRONG. adj. [head and strong.] Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable; resolute to run his own way: as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom. Hooker, Dedication.

How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding? —Where I have learnt me to repent the sin

Of disobedient opposition. Shakesf. Romeo and Juliet.

But such a headstrong potent fault it is,

That it but mocks reproof. Shakesf. Twelfth Night.

He ill aspires to rule

Cities of men or headstrong multitudes,

Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude. L'Estrange.

Now let the headstrong boy my will controul:

Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:

I, for myself, th' imperial feat will gain,

And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryd. Aurengz. Your

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
 But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force. Dryden.
 I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
 This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addis.
 Why there it is, you will be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour. Arb.
 Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
 Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account
 Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Phillips.
HE'ADWORKMAN. n. f. [head work and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest.

Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick,
 the headworkman, to prepare his furnace, metal, and stamps?
Swift's Address to Parliament.

HE'ADY. adj. [from head]

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
 While yet the cool and temp'rate wind of grace
 O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
 Of heady murder, spoil and villany. Shakesp. Henry V.

I am advised what I say:

Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
 Nor, heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
 Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. Shakespeare.
 I'll forbear,

And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
 To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
 For the sound man. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Never came reformation in a flood
 With such a heady current scow'ring faults;
 Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
 So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
 As in this king. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Wives, the readiest helps

To betray heady husbands, rob the easy. Ben. Jonns. Catil.
 Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good nature. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seemed to be sack. Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
 Here's julep-dance, ptisan of song and show:
 Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
 You're come to farce, that's asses milk, already. Dryden.

Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full. Pope.

TO HEAL. v. a. [balgan, Gothick; pælan, Saxon; heelen,
 Dutch.]

1. To cure a person; to restore from hurt or sickness.

I will restore health, and heal thee of thy wounds. Jer. xxx.
 Who would not believe that our Saviour healed the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did the same miracles? Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to an honourable degree of skill in the art of healing. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

2. To cure a wound or distemper.

Thou hast no healing medicines. Jer. xxx. 13.

A fontanel had been made in the same leg, which he was forced to heal up, by reason of the pain. Wiseman's Surgery.

3. To perform the act of making a sore to cicatrize, after it is cleansed.

After separation of the eschar, I deterged and healed. Wisem.

TO HEAL. v. n. To grow well. Used of wounds or sores.

Those wounds heal that men do give themselves. Shakesp.
 Abscesses will have a greater or less tendency to heal, as they are higher or lower in the body. Sharp's Surgery.

HE'ALER. n. f. [from heal.] One who cures or heals.

I will not be an healer. Is. iii. 7.

HE'ALING. participial adj. [from heal.] Mild; mollifying;
 gentle; assuasive: as, he's of a healing pacifick temper.

HEALTH. n. f. [from þeal, Saxon.]

1. Freedom from bodily pain or sickness.

Health is the faculty of performing all actions proper to a human body, in the most perfect manner. Quincy.

Our father is in good health, he is yet alive. Gen. xliii. 28.

May be he is not well;

Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
 Whereto our health is bound. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Welfare of mind; purity; goodness; principle of salvation.

There is no health in us. Common Prayer.

The best preservative to keep the mind in health, is the faithful admonition of a friend. Bacon, Essay 28.

3. Salvation spiritual and temporal.

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, and art so far from my health, and from the words of my complaint? Psf.

4. Wish of happiness in drinking.

Come, love and health to all;

I drink to th' general joy of the whole table.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He asked leave to begin two healths: the first was to the king's mistress, and the second to his wife. Howel.

For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,

I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health. Dryden's Persf.

HE'ALTHFUL. adj. [health and full.]

1. Free from sickness.

Adam knew no disease, so long as temperance from the for-bidden fruit secured him: nature was his physician, and innocence and abstinence would have kept him healthful to immortality. South's Sermons.

2. Well disposed.

Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
 Had you an healthful ear to hear it. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

3. Wholesome; salubrious.

There be many good and healthful airs that do appear by habitation and proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs.
Bacon's Natural History.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules

To loathsome sickness; worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milt. P. Lost.

Our healthful food the stomach labours thus,

At first embracing what it straight doth crush. Dryden.

4. Salutary; productive of salvation.

Pour upon them the healthful spirit of thy grace. Com. Prayer.

2. Wholsomely.

HE'ALTHFULNESS. n. f. [from healthful.]

1. State of being well.

2. Wholsomeness; salubrious qualities.

You have tasted of that cup whereof I have liberally drank, which I look upon as God's physick, having that in healthfulness which it wants in pleasure. King Charles.

We ventured to make a standard of the healthfulness of the air from the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases. Graunt.

To the winds the inhabitants of Geneva ascribe the healthfulness of their air; for as the Alps surround them on all sides, there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind put them in motion. Addison on Italy.

HE'ALTHILY. adv. [from healthy.] Without sickness or pain.

HE'ALTHINESS. n. f. [from healthy.] The state of health.

HE'ALTHLESS. adj. [from health.] Weak; sickly; infirm.

He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose garment is all made of fringes, and his meat nothing but sauces;
 they are healthless, chargeable, and useless. Taylor.

HE'ALTHSOME. adj. [from health.] Wholsome; salutary.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,

To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
 And there be strang'd ere my Romeo comes? Shakespeare.

HE'ALTHY. adj. [from health.] In health; free from sickness;
 hale; sound.

The husbandman returns from the field, and from manuring his ground, strong and healthy, because innocent and laborious. South's Sermons.

Gardening or husbandry, and working in wood, are fit and healthy recreations for a man of study or business. Locke.

Temperance, industry, and a publick spirit, running thro' the whole body of the people in Holland, hath preserved an infant commonwealth, of a sickly constitution, through so many dangers, as a much more healthy one could never have struggled against without those advantages. Swift.

Air and exercise contribute to make the animal healthy. Arb.

HEAM. n. f. In beasts the same as the after-birth in women.

HEAP. n. f. [heap, Saxon; hoop, Dutch and Scottish.]

1. Many single things thrown together; a pile; an accumulation.

The way to lay the city flat,

And bury all which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The dead were fallen down by heaps, one upon another.

Wisd. xviii. 23.

Huge heaps of slain around the body rise. Dryden's Æn.

One may form from it an idea of Venice in its first beginnings, when it had only a few heaps of earth for its dominions. Addison on Italy.

2. A crowd; a throng; a rabble.

A cruel tyranny, bathed in the blood of their emperors; a heap of vassals and slaves, no freemen, no inheritance, no stirp or ancient families. Bacon's holy War.

3. Cluster; number driven together.

An universal cry resounds aloud;

The sailors run in heaps, a helpless crowd. Dryden.

TO HEAP. v. a. [from the noun]

Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and spice it well. Ezek. xxiv. 10.

2. To accumulate; to lay up.

Though the wicked heap up silver as the dust, and raiment as the clay; but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver. Job xxvii. 16.

How great the credit was, wherein that oracle was preserved, served, may be gathered from the vast riches which were there heaped up from the offerings of all the Grecian nations. Temple.

They who will make profession of painting, must heap up treasures out of their reading, and there will find many wonderful means of raising themselves above others. Dryden.

3. To add to something else.

For those of old,

And the late dignities heap'd up to them,

We rest your hermits.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HE'APER. n. f. [from heap.] One that makes piles or heaps.

HE'APY. adj. [from heap.] Lying in heaps.

Where a dim gleam the paly lanthorn throws

O'er the mid pavement, heapy rubbish grows.

Gay.

Scarce his head

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk

Lies slumb'ring fulgen in the white abyfs. Thomf. Winter.

To HEAR. v. n. [ hýnan, Saxon; hooren, Dutch. ]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.

2. To listen; to hearken.

Since 'tis your command, what you so well

Are pleas'd to hear, I cannot grieve to tell.

Denham.

3. To be told; to have an account.

I have heard by many of this man.

Acts ix. 13.

I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

If. xxi. 3.

Prepare to hear of such a crime

As tragick poets, since the birth of time,

Ne'er feign'd.

Tate's Juven. Sat. 15.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

To HEAR. v. a.

1. To perceive by the ear.

The trumpeters and fingers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord.

2 Chro. v. 13.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.

He sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

Acts xxiv. 24.

I must beg the forbearance of censure, 'till I have been heard out in the sequel of this discourse.

Locke.

5. To try; to attend judicially.

Hear the causes, and judge righteously.

Deutr. i. 16.

6. To acknowledge. A Latin phrase.

Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,

Whose fountain who shall tell?

Milton.

Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth?

Prior.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as heard-bearht, a glorious keeper: sometimes final, as cyneheard, a royal keeper. Gibson's Camden. It is now written herd: as, cowherd, a cowkeeper; hýrd, Saxon.

HE'ARER. n. f. [from hear.] One who attends to any doctrine or discourse delivered orally by another.

And so was she dulled withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation.

Sidney, b. ii.

St. John and St. Mathew, which have recorded these sermons, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees.

Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

Words, be they never so few, are too many, when they benefit not the hearer.

Hooker, b. v.

The hearers will shed tears,

And say, alas, it was a piteous deed!

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,

And send the hearers weeping to their beds.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

Plays in themselves have neither hopes nor fears;

Their fate is only in their hearers ears.

Ben. Johnson.

Her hearers had no share

In all she spoke, except to stare.

Swift.

HE'ARING. n. f. [from hear.]

1. The sense by which sounds are perceived.

Bees are called with sound upon brass, and therefore they have hearing.

2. Audience.

The French ambassador upon that instant

Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come

To give him hearing.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Judicial trial.

Agrippa and Bernice entered into the place of hearing. Acts.

The readers are the jury to decide according to the merits of the cause, or to bring it to another hearing before some other court.

Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Those of different principles may be betrayed to give you a fair hearing, and to know what you have to say for yourself.

Addison's Freeholder.

4. Reach of the ear.

If we profess, as Peter did, that we love the Lord, and profess it in the hearing of men; charity is prone to hear all things, and therefore charitable men are likely to think we do so.

Hooker, b. iii.

In our hearing the king charged thee, beware that none touch Abfalom.

2 Sa. xviii. 12.

You have been talked of since your travels much,

And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality

Wherein they say you shine.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The fox had the good luck to be within hearing. L'Estrange.

To HE'ARKEN. v. n. [hearnian, Saxon.]

1. To listen by way of curiosity.

The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,

Her father keeps from access of suitors.

Shakespeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams.

Shakesp. R. III.

They do me too much injury,

That ever said I hearken'd for your death:

If it were so, I might have let alone

Th' insulting hand of Douglas over you.

Shakespeare.

The gaping three-mouth'd dog forgets to snarl;

The furies hearken, and their snakes uncurl.

Dryd. Virgil.

Louder, and yet more loud, I hear the alarms

Of human cries:

I mount the terrafs, thence the town survey,

And hearken what the fruitful sounds convey.

Dryden.

He who makes much necessary, will want much; and, wearied with the difficulty of the attainment, will incline to hearken after any expedient that offers to shorten his way to it.

Rogers's Sermons.

2. To attend; to pay regard.

Hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor.

Nu. xxiii. 18.

Those who put passion in the place of reason, neither use their own, nor hearken to other people's reason, any farther than it suits their humour.

Locke.

There's not a blessing individuals find,

But some way leans and hearkens to the kind.

Pope.

HE'ARKENER. n. f. [from hearken.] Listener; one that hearkens.

HE'ARSAY. n. f. [hear and say.] Report; rumour; what is not known otherwise than by account from others.

For prey these shepherds two he took,

Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend

With hearsay pictures, or a window look.

Sidney.

He affirms by hearsay, that some giants saved themselves upon the mountain Baris in Armenia.

Raleigh's History.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, publish every blot in his life, and depend upon hearsay to defame him.

Addison's Freeholder.

HEARSE. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]

1. A carriage in which the dead are conveyed to the grave.

2. A temporary monument set over a grave.

To add to your laments,

Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,

I must inform you of a dismal fight.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

HEART. n. f. [heort, Saxon; hertz, German.]

1. The muscle which by its contraction and dilation propels the blood through the course of circulation, and is therefore considered as the source of vital motion. It is supposed in popular language to be the seat sometimes of courage, sometimes of affection.

He with providence and courage so passed over all, that the mother took such spiteful grief at it, that her heart brake withal, and she died.

Sidney.

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Snakes, in my heart blood warm'd, that sting my heart.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

Our battle is more full of names than your's,

Our men more perfect in the use of arms,

Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;

Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.

Shak. H. IV.

I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.

—Master Page, much good do it your good heart.

Shakesp.

But

But since the brain doth lodge the pow'rs of sense,
How makes it in the heart those passions spring?

The mutual love, the kind intelligence

'Twixt heart and brain, this sympathy doth bring. Davies.

We all set our hearts at rest, since whatever comes from above is for the best. L'Estrange.

The only true zeal is that which is guided by a good light in the head, and that which consists of good and innocent affections in the heart. Spratt's Sermons.

Prest with heart corroding grief and years,

To the gay court a rural shed prefers. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The chief part; the vital part.

Barley being steeped in water, and turned upon a dry floor, will sprout half an inch; and, if it be let alone, much more,
until the heart be out. Bacon's Natural History.

3. The inner part of any thing.

Some Englishmen did with great danger pass by water into the heart of the country. Abbot's Description of the World.

The king's forces are employed in appeasing disorders more near the heart of the kingdom. Hayward.

Generally the inside or heart of trees is harder than the outward parts. Boyle.

Here in the heart of all the town I'll stay,

And timely succour, where it wants, convey. Dryden.

If the foundations be bad, provide good piles made of heart of oak, such as will reach ground. Moron's Mech. Exer.

4. Person; character. Used with respect to courage or kindness.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Hey, my hearts; cheerly, my hearts. Shakespeare's Tempest.

What says my heart of elder? Ha! is he dead, bully-stale?

Is he dead? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. Courage; spirit.

If it please you to make his fortune known, as I have done Erona's, I will after take heart again to go on with his falsehood. Sidney, b. ii.

There did other like unhappy accidents happen out of England, which gave heart and good opportunity to them to regain their old possessions. Spenser on Ireland.

Wide was the wound; and a large lukewarm flood,

Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously,

That when the painim spy'd the streaming blood,

Gave him great heart and hope of victory. Fairy Queen.

Eve, recover'ing heart, reply'd. Milton.

Having left that city well provided, and in good heart, his majesty removed with his little army to Bewdley. Clarendon.

Finding that it did them no hurt, they took heart upon't, went up to't, and viewed it. L'Estrange's Fables.

The expelled nations take heart, and when they fly from one country invade another. Temple.

6. Seat of love.

Ah! what avails it me the flocks to keep,

Who lost my heart while I preserv'd my sheep? Pope.

7. Affection; inclination.

Joab perceived that the king's heart was towards Absalom.

2 Sa. xiv. i.

Means how to feel, and learn each other's heart,

By th' abbot's skill of Westminster is found. Daniel.

Nor set thy heart,

Thus over-fond, on that which is not thine. Milton.

'Tis well to be tender; but to set the heart too much upon any thing, is what we cannot justify. L'Estrange.

A friend makes me a feast, and sets all before me; but I set my heart upon one dish alone, and if that happen to be thrown down, I scorn all the rest. Temple.

Then mixing pow'rful herbs with magick art,

She chang'd his form who could not change his heart. Dryd.

What did I not, her stubborn heart to gain?

But all my vows were answer'd with disdain. Dryden.

8. Memory.

Whatsoever was attained to, concerning God and his working in nature, the same was delivered over by heart and tradition from wise men to a posterity equally zealous. Raleigh.

We call the committing of a thing to memory the getting it by heart; for it is the memory that must transmit it to the heart; and it is in vain to expect that the heart should keep its hold of any truth, when the memory has let it go. South.

Shall I in London act this idle part?

Composing songs for fools to get by heart. Pope.

9. Good-will; ardour of zeal. To take to heart any thing, is to be zealous or solicitous or ardent about it.

If he take not their causes to heart, how should there be but in them frozen coldness, when his affections seem benumbed, from whom theirs should take fire? Hooker.

If he would take the business to heart, and deal in it effectually, it would succeed well. Bacon's Henry VII.

The lady marchioness of Hertford engaged her husband to take this business to heart. Clarendon, b. viii.

Amongst those, who took it most to heart, sir John Stawel was the chief. Clarendon, b. viii.

Every prudent and honest man would join himself to that side which had the good of their country most at heart. Addis.

Learned men have been now a long time searching after the happy country from which our first parents were exiled: if they can find it, with all my heart. Woodward's Nat. History.

I would not be sorry to find the Presbyterians mistaken in this point, which they have most at heart. Swift.

What I have most at heart is, that some method should be thought on for ascertaining and fixing our language. Swift.

10. Passions; anxiety; concern.

Set your heart at rest;

The fairy land buys not the child of me. Shakespeare.

11. Secret thoughts; recesses of the mind.

Michal saw king David leaping and dancing before the Lord, and she despised him in her heart. 2 Sa. vi. 16.

The next generation will in tongue and heart, and every way else, become English; so as there will be no difference or distinction, but the Irish sea, betwixt us. Davies on Ireland.

Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand. King Charles.

Would you have him open his heart to you, and ask your advice, you must begin to do so with him first. Locke.

Men, some to pleasure, some to business take;

But every woman is, at heart, a rake. Pope, Epistle ii.

12. Disposition of mind.

Doing all things with so pretty a grace, that it seemed ignorance could not make him do amiss, because he had a heart to do well. Sidney.

13. The heart is considered as the seat of tenderness: a bad heart therefore is cruelty.

I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld

Heart hardening spectacles. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Such iron hearts we are, and such

The base barbarity of human kind. Rowe's Jane Shore.

14. To find in the HEART. To be not wholly averse.

For my breaking the laws of friendship with you, I could find in my heart to ask you pardon for it, but that your now handling of me gives me reason to confirm my former dealing. Sidney.

15. Secret meaning; hidden intention.

I will on with my speech in your praise,

And then shew you the heart of my message. Shakespeare.

16. Conscience; sense of good or ill.

Every man's heart and conscience doth in good or evil, even secretly committed, and known to none but itself, either like or disallow itself. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

17. Strength; power.

Try whether leaves of trees, swept together, with some chalk and dung mixed, to give them more heart, would not make a good compost. Bacon's Natural History.

He keeps a sabbath of alternate years,

That the spent earth may gather heart again,

And, better'd by cessation, bear the grain. Dryden's Georg.

Care must be taken not to plow ground out of heart, because if 'tis in heart, it may be improved by man again. Mortimer.

18. Utmost degree.

This gay charm,

Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd thee home,

Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end,

Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,

Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss. Shakespeare.

19. Life. For my heart seems sometimes to signify, if life was at stake; and sometimes for tenderness.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate,

And could not get him for my heart to do it. Shakespeare.

I gave it to a youth,

A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee:

I could not for my heart deny it him. Shakespeare's Mer. of Venice.

Profoundly skill'd in the black art,

As English Merlin for his heart. Hudibras, p. i.

20. It is much used in composition for mind, or affection.

HEART-ACH. n. f. [heart and ach.] Sorrow; pang; anguish of mind.

To die—to sleep—

No more; and, by a sleep, to say we end

The heart ach, and the thousand natural shocks

That flesh is heir to. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HEART-BREAK. n. f. [heart and break] Overpowering sorrow.

Better a little chiding than a great deal of heartbreak. Shakespeare.

HEART-BREAKER. n. f. A cant name for a woman's curls, supposed to break the heart of all her lovers.

Like Sampson's heartbreakers, it grew

In time to make a nation rue. Hudibras, p. i.

HEART-BREAKING. adj. Overpowering with sorrow.

Those piteous plaints and sorrowful sad time,

Which late you poured forth, as ye did sit

Beside the silver springs of Helicone,

Making your musick of heartbreaking mone. Spenser.

HEART-BREAKING. n. f. Overpowering grief.

What greater heartbreaking and confusion can there be to one, than to have all his secret faults laid open, and the sentence of condemnation passed upon him? Hakewill.

HEART-BURNED. adj. [heart and burn.] Having the heart inflamed.

How tartly that gentleman looks ! I never can see him but I am heart-burn'd an hour after. Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.

HEART-BURNING. n. f. [heart and burn.]

1. Pain at the stomach, commonly from an acrid humour.

Fine clean chalk is one of the most noble absorbents, and powerfully corrects and subdues the acrid humours in the stomach: this property renders it very serviceable in the cardialgia, or heart-burning. Woodward on Fossils.

2. Discontent; secret enmity.

In great changes, when right of inheritance is broke, there will remain much heart-burning and discontent among the meaner people. Swift to Pope.

HEART-DEAR. adj. Sincerely beloved.

The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart-dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain! Shak. H. IV.

HEART-EASE. n. f. Quiet; tranquillity.

What infinite heart-ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? Shakespeare's Henry V.

HEART-EASING. adj. Giving quiet.

But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing mirth. Milton.

HEART-FELT. adj. Felt in the conscience.

What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
The soul's calm sun-shine, and the heart-felt joy,
Is virtue's prize. Pope's Essay on Man.

HEART-PEAS. n. f. A plant.

The characters are: it hath a trailing stalk, emitting clasps, whereby it fastens itself to whatever plant stands near it: the flower-cup consists of three leaves, the flower of eight leaves, and are of an anomalous figure: the ovary becomes a fruit like a bladder, divided into three cells, in which are contained round seeds in form of peas, of a black colour, having the figure of an heart of a white colour upon each. Miller.

HEART-QUELLING. adj. Conquering the affection.

And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son, upon you smile. Spenser.

HEART-RENDING. adj. Killing with anguish.

Heart-rending news, and dreadful to those few
Who her resemble, and her steps pursue;
That death should licence have to rage among
The fair, the wise, the virtuous, and the young! Waller.

HEART-ROBBING. adj. Ecstasick; depriving of thought.

Sweet is thy virtue, as thyself sweet art;
For when on me thou shinedst, late in sadness,
A melting pleasure ran through every part,
And me revived with heart-robbing gladness. Spenser.

HEART-SICK. adj.

1. Pained in mind.

If we be heart-sick, or afflicted with an uncertain soul, then we are true desirers of relief and mercy. Taylor.

2. Mortally ill; hurt in the constitution.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.
—Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans,
Mist like, infold me from the search of eyes. Shakespeare.

HEARTS-EASE. n. f. A plant.

Hearts-ease is a sort of violet that blows all Summer, and often in Winter: it sows itself. Mortimer.

HEART-SORE. n. f. Struck with sorrow.

Wherever he that godly knight may find,
His only heart-sore and his only foe. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HEART-STRING. n. f. [string and heart.] The tendons or nerves supposed to brace and sustain the heart.

He was by Jove deprived
Of life himself, and heart-strings of an eagle rived. Fa. Qu.
How, out of tune on the strings?

—Not so; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

That grates my heart-strings: what should discontent him!
Except he thinks I live too long. Denham's Sophy.

If thou thinkest thou shalt perish, I cannot blame thee to be sad 'till thy heart-strings crack. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

There's the fatal wound,
That tears my heart-strings; but he shall be found,
My arms shall hold him. Granville.

HEART-STUCK. adj.

1. Driven to the heart; infixed for ever in the mind.

Who is with him?
—None but the fool who labours to out-jeft
His heart-struck injuries. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Shocked with fear or dismay.

He added not; for Adam, at the news
Heart-struck, with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

2. With the vitals yet unimpaired.

HEART-WOUNDED. adj. Filled with passion of love or grief.

Mean time the queen, without reflection due,
Heart-wounded, to the bed of state withdrew. Pope's Odyss.

HEART-WOUNDING. adj. Filling with grief.

With a shriek heart-wounding loud she cry'd,
While down her cheeks the gushing torrents ran,
Fast falling on her hands. Rowe's Jane Shore.

HE'ARTED. adj. It is only used in composition: as, hard hearted.

TO HE'ARTEN. v. a. [from heart.]

1. To encourage; to animate; to stir up.

Palladius blaming those that were slow, heartening them that were forward, but especially with his own example leading them, made an impression into the squadron. Sidney.

My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:

Unsheath your sword, good father; cry, St. George! Shak.
This rare man, Tydides, would prepare;

That he might conquer, hearten'd him, and taught him tricks. Chapman's Iliads.

Thus hearten'd well, and flesh'd upon his prey,
The youth may prove a man another day. Dryden.

2. To meliorate with manure.

The ground one year at rest; forget not then
With richest dung to hearten it again. May's Virg. Georg.

HEARTH. n. f. The pavement of a room in which a fire is made; the ground under the chimney.

Hoop'd out of Rome: now this extremity
Hath brought me to this hearth. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap,
Whereas thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shakespeare.
Good luck befriend thee, son; for at thy birth

The fairy ladies danc'd upon the hearth. Milton.
The vanquish'd fires withdraw from every place;

Or, full with feeding, sink into a sleep:
Each household genius shews again its face,
And from the hearths the little lares creep. Dryden.

HE'ARTILY. adv. [from hearty.]

1. Sincerely; actively; diligently; vigorously.

Where his judgment led him to oppose men on a publick account, he would do it vigorously and heartily; yet the opposition ended there. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. From the heart; fully.

I bear no malice for my death;
But those that fought it, I could wish more Christians;
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them. Shakesf. H. VIII.
If to be sad is to be wise,
I do most heartily despise

Whatever Socrates has said,
Or Tully writ, or Wanley read. Prior.

3. Eagerly; with desire.

As for my eating heartily of the food, know that anxiety has hindered my eating 'till this moment. Addison's Guardian.

HE'ARTINESS. n. f. [from hearty.]

1. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

This entertainment may a free face put on; derive a liberty from heartiness, and well become the agent. Shakespeare.

2. Vigour; diligence; strength.

The anger of an enemy represents our faults, or admonishes us of our duty, with more heartiness than the kindness of a friend. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

HE'ARTLESS. adj. [from heart.] Without courage; spiritless.

I joyed oft to chase the trembling pricket,
Or hunt the heartless hare 'till she were tame. Spenser.

Then hopeless, heartless 'gan the cunning thief,
Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. Fairy Queen, b. i.

What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?
Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death. Shakespeare.

Thousands besides stood mute and heartless there,
Men valiant all; nor was I us'd to fear. Cowley.

The peasants were accustomed to payments, and grew heartless as they grew poor. Temple.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

HE'ARTLESSLY. adv. [from heartless.] Without courage; faintly; timidly.

HE'ARTLESSNESS. n. f. [from heartless.] Want of courage or spirit; dejection of mind.

HE'ARTY. adj. [from heart.]

1. Sincere; undissembled; warm; zealous.

They did not bring that heartly inclination to peace, which they hoped they would have done. Clarendon, b. viii.

But the kind hosts their entertainment grace
With heart welcome and an open face;
In all they did, you might discern with ease
A willing mind, and a desire to please. Dryden.
Every man may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself heart for the government. Swift.

2. In full health.

3. Vigorous; strong.

Whose laughs are heart, though his jests are coarse,
And loves you best of all things but his horse. Pope.

4. Strong; hard; durable.

Oak, and the like true heart timber, being strong in all positions, may be better trusted in cross and transverse work.

Wotton's Architecture.
HEARTY-HALE. adj. [heart and hale.] Good for the heart.

Vein-healing verven, and head-purging dill,
Sound savory, and basil heart-hale. Spenser.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, hǣt, Saxon; heete, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation:
whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.
The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden's Aurengz.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

8. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison's Freeholder.

9. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.
They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to disserve them. Sidney, b. ii.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst
By those that feel their sharpness. Shakespeare, King Lear.
It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in the cool sedate reflections of his mind.

South's Sermons.
We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chafe. Atterbury's Sermons.

One playing at hazard, held in many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

10. Faction; contest; party rage.

Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden's Homer.

11. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heats of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.

TO HEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be beated. Dan. iii. 19.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried beats them, and changes their colour.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine beat fools. Shakesp.
Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, beats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation beats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest. Dryden.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well beated the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

HE'ATER. n. f. [from beat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooth and plait linnen.

HEATH. n. f. [erica, Latin.]

1. A plant.

It is a shrub of low stature: the leaves are small, and abide green all the year: the flower consists of one leaf, is naked, and, for the most part, shaped like a pitcher: the ovary, which is produced in the bottom of the flower, becomes a roundish fruit, divided into four cells, in which are contained many small seeds. Miller.

In Kent they cut up the heath in May, burn it, and spread the ashes. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Oft with bolder wing they soaring dare
The purple heath. Thomson's Spring.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetick greeting. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary, will smell a great way into the sea. Bacon's Natural History.

HEATH-COCK. n. f. [heath and cock.] A large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, heath-cock, and powte. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HEATH-POUT. n. f. [heath and pout.] A bird.

Not heath-pout, or the rarer bird
Which Phæcis or Ionia yields,
More pleasing morsels would afford
Than the fat olives of my fields. Dryden.

HEATH-PEAS. n. f. A species of bitter VETCH, which see.

HEATH-ROSE. n. f. [heath and rose.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HE'ATHEN. n. f. [heyden, German.] The gentiles; the pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name. 1 Chro. xvi. 35.

If the opinions of others, whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be heathens in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England. Locke.

In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient heathens. Addison's Spectator.

HE'ATHEN. adj. Gentile; pagan.

It was impossible for a heathen author to relate these things, because, if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a heathen. Addison.

HE'ATHENISH. adj. [from heathen.]

1. Belonging to the gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, chosen they were, St.
Paul excepted; the rest unschooled altogether, and unlettered men. Hooker, b. iv.

2. Wild; savage; rapacious; cruel.

The Moors did tread under their heathenish feet whatever little they found yet there standing. Spenser.

That execrable Cromwel made a heathenish or rather inhuman edict against the poor episcopal clergy, that they should neither preach, pray in publick, baptize, marry, bury, nor teach school. South's Sermons.

HE'ATHENISHLY. adv. [from heathenish.] After the manner of heathens.

HE'ATHENISM. n. f. [from heathen.] Gentilism; paganism.
It signifies the acknowledgment of the true God, in opposition to heathenism. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

HE'ATHY. adj. [from heath.] Full of heath.

This sort of land they order the same way with the heathy land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO HEAVE. v. a. pret. heaved, anciently hove; part. heaved, or hoven.

1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay,
Chain'd on the burning lake; nor ever hence

Had ris'n, or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

2. To carry.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there; and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. To raise; to lift.

So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite. Fa. Queen.
Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakesp. K. Lear.
He dy'd in fight;

Fought next my person, as in comfort fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound. Dryd. Don Seb.

4. To cause to swell.

The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and stick half way. Dryden.
The glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths and croud upon our shores. Thomson.

5. To force up from the breast.

Made she no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shak. King Lear.
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakesp. As you like it.

6. To exalt; to elevate.

Poor shadow, painted queen;
One heav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below. Shak. R. III.

7. To puff; to elate.

The Scots, heaved up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain. Hayward.

TO HEAVE. v. n.

1. To pant; to breathe with pain.

'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side. Dryden.

2. To labour.

The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days. Atterbury.

3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.

Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles. Dryden.
The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart. Dryden.
No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean: I cannot see the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Addison's Spectator.

Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves. Prior.

The heaving tide

In widen'd circles beats on either side. Gay's Trivia.

4. To heave; to feel a tendency to vomit.

HEAVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Lift; exertion or effort upwards.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the first foundation, or swallow them.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Rising of the breast.

There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakesp.

3. Effort to vomit.

4. Struggle to rise.

But after many strains and heaves,

He got up to his saddle eaves. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

HEAVE Offering. n. f. An offering among the Jews.

Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor. Num.

HE'AVEN. n. f. [peopon, which seems to be derived from peopb, the places over head, Saxon.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.

A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven kissing hill. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Thy race in time to come

Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Æn.

The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens, as the best Hebreicians understand them.

Raleigh's History of the World.

This act, with shouts heav'n high, the friendly band Applaud. Dryden's Fables.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.

It is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakesp. Macbeth.

These, the late

Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell. Milton.

All yet left of that revolted rout,

Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,

Sublime with expectation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.

Now heav'n help him! Shakespeare's King Lear.

The will

And high permission of all-ruling heav'n

Left him at large. Milton.

The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophecy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Temple.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.

Our brows

No more obey the heavens than our courtiers. Shak. Cymbel.

Take physick, pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,

And show the heavens more just. Shakesp. King Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,

As I can of those mysteries which heaven

Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Heav'n's! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!

How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow. Dryd.

5. Elevation; sublimity.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heav'n of invention. Shakesp. Henry V. Prol.

6. It is often used in composition.

HEAVEN-BEGOT. Begot by a celestial power.

If I am heav'n-begot, assert your son

By some sure sign. Dryden.

HEAVEN-BORN. Descended from the celestial regions; native of heaven.

If a fever fires his sulphurous blood,

In ev'ry fit he feels the hand of God,

And heav'n-born flame. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.

Oh heav'n-born sisters! source of art!

Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;

Who lead fair virtue's train along,

Moral truth, and mystick song! Pope.

HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven.

Much is the force of heav'n-bred poesy. Shakespeare.

HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.

My soul inspire,

As when we wrapt Troy's heav'n-built walls in fire. Pope.

His arms had wrought the destin'd fall

Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.

HEAVEN-DIRECTED.

1. Raised towards the sky.

Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.

2. Taught by the powers of heaven.

O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence;

To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd;

The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.

HE'AVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Sidney.

Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;

Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryd.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.

Adoring first the genius of the place,

Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryd. Æn.

HE'AVENLY. adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,

Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,

And ever-musing melancholy reigns,

What means this tumult in a vessel's veins? Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.

Truth and peace and love shall ever shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, t' whose happy-making sight alone,

Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

HE'AVENWARD. adv. [heaven and peapb, Saxon.] Towards heaven.

I prostrate lay,

By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,

Or to object; at length, my mournful look

Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.

HE'AVILY. adv. [from heavy.]

1. With great ponderousness.

2. Grievously; afflictively.

Ease must be impracticable to the envious: they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common blessings fall heavily upon them. Collier of Envy.

3. Sorrowfully;

3. Sorrowfully; with an air of dejection.

I came hither to transport the tydings,
Which I have heavily born. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

—O, I have past a miserable night. Shakespeare's R. III.

This O'Neil took very heavily, because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarendon.

HE'AVINESS. n. f. [from heavy.]

1. Ponderousness; the quality of being heavy; weight.

The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.

2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.

We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind. Hooker, b. v. f. 38.

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.

Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Pet. i. 6.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;

But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shak. Henry IV.

Let us not burthen our remembrance with

An heaviness that's gone. Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness; dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,

That makes the weight. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?

This lethargy that creeps through all my senses? Add. Cato.

He would not violate that sweet recess,

And found besides a welcome heaviness,

Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthn. on Aliment.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some from other European ports, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbuthnot on Coins.

HE'AVY. adj. [heafɪg, Saxon.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the center; contrary to light.

Merfennus tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.

Let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakespeare.

3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.

Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac. v. 23.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever;

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Are you so gossip'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue?

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,

And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Chartres, at the levee,

Tells with a sneer the tydings heavy. Swift.

4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.

My heavy eyes, you say, confess

A heart to love and grief inclin'd. Prior.

5. Wanting spirit or rapidity of sentiment; unanimated.

A work was to be done, a heavy writer to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.

6. Wanting activity; indolent; lazy.

Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd;

But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden's Fables.

7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.

Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Lu. ix. 33.

8. Slow; sluggish.

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,

And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shakesp. Rich. II.

9. Stupid; foolish.

This heavy headed revel, East and West

Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakesp.

I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Knolles's History of the Turks.

10. Burdensome; troublesome; tedious.

I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Loaded; incumbered; burthened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon's Henry VII.

12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arb.

13. Rich in soil; fertile, as heavy lands.

14. Deep; cumbersome, as heavy roads.

HE'AVY. adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. If. xlv. 1.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Mat. ii. 28.

HE'BDOMAD. n. f. [hebdomas, Latin.] A week; a space of seven days.

Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.

HEBDO'MADAL. } adj. [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly;

HEBDO'MADARY. } consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.

TO HEBE'TATE. v. a. [hebetō, Latin; hebetē, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey on Consumptions.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arb. and Pope's M. Scrib.

HEBETATION. n. f. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HE'BETUDE. n. f. [hebetudo, Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.

The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey on the Plague.

HE'BRAISM. n. f. [hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.

HE'BRAIST. n. f. [hebraus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HE'BRICIAN. n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebreicians understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

HE'CATOMB. n. f. [hecatombe, French; ἑκατόμβη.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.

In rich mens homes

I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;

None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb,

And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.

Her triumphant sons in war succeed,

And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.

HE'CTICAL. } adj. [hectique, French, from ἥξις.]

HE'CTICK. }

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectick fever hath got hold

Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No hectick student scars the gentle maid. Taylor.

HE'CTICK. n. f. An hectick fever.

Like the hectick in my blood he rages,

And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HE'CTOR. n. f. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warrior.]

1. A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversive, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South's Sermons.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,

And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

TO HE'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Government of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit, fortune makes her slave;

But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

To HE'CTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillington.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Speel.

Don Carlos made her chief director,

That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE. n. f. [hegge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze

Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his stile and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing. Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus. xxviii. 24.

Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon, Essay 47.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.

3. To incircle for defence.

England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakesp. King John.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That reason can but peep to what it would. Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. To shut up within an inclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckow, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

Bay not me,

I'll not endure it: you forget yourself
To hedge me in: I am a soldier. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer:

I pr'ythee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift's Directions to the Footman.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you rogue will ensconce your rags, your catamountain looks, your red-lettice phrases. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,

Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,

And should, if I were worthy to be judge,

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shak. Hen. VI.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount

Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray on the Creation.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakesp. Richard III.

3. A plant. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.

The flower has four leaves, expanded in a crucial form: the pointal becomes a long, slender, bivalve pod, divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many round seeds. The species are five. Miller.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant raillery. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,

Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen

By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkley to Pope.

HE'DGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow.] A sparrow that lives in bushes.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,

That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakesp. K. Lear.

HE'DGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox

In his loose traces from the furrow came,

And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [heban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;

But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryden.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton heed and giddy cunning,

The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison's Cato.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; steadiness.

He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,

He did it with a serious mind; a heed

Was in his countenance. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'EDFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;

For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;

And, after, we will both our judgments join,

In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing.

I am commanded

To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;

Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,

Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shak. H. VI.

To him one of the other twins was bound,

Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.

Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;

My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope's Odyssey.

HE'EDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, structor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

H E F

HE'EDFULNESS. n. f. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HE'EDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Dict.

HE'EDINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance. Dict.

The heedless lover does not know

Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.

Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,

Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.

Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.

HE'EDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Whilst ye discharge the duty of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

HE'EDLESSNESS. n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitied, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Locke.

HEEL. n. f. [pele, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,

His winged heels, and then his armed head;

With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;

But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Denham.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison's Guardian.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't. L'Estrange's Fables.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth?

—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakesp. Timon.

But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakesp. Hamlet.

Could we break our way

By force, and at our heels all hell should rise

With blackest insurrection, to confound

Heav'n's purest light. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

5. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.

Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,

Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Otway.

6. To follow close as a dependent.

Through proud London he came fighting on,

After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shakesp. Henry IV.

7. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.

If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all

By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads

Clap round fines for neglect. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

One half of man, his mind,

Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,

And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummies; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison's Freeholder.

8. Any thing shaped like a heel.

At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. The back part of a stocken: whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle:

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shak. K. Lear.

TO HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance.

I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk. Shakespeare.

2. To lean on one side: as, the ship heels.

HEE'LER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.

HE'EL-PIECE. n. f. [heel and piece.] A piece fixed on the hinder part of the shoe, to supply what is worn away.

TO HE'EL-PIECE. v. a. [heel and piece.] To put a piece of leather on a shoe-heel.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes. Arb.

HEFT. n. f. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort.

May be in the cup

A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart,

H E I

And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge

Is not infected: but if one present

Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known

How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides

With violent hefts.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

2. [For haft.] Handle.

His oily side devours both blade and heft.

Waller.

HE'GIRA. n. f. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heracleus. Harris.

HE'IFER. n. f. [peaphone, Saxon.] A young cow.

Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,

And fees fast by a butcher with an ax,

But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Shakesp.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon's Natural History.

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,

Nor thirsty heifers seek the gliding flood. Pope's Winter.

1. An expression of slight languour and uneasiness.

Heigh-ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shak.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll tofs off our ale 'till we cannot stand,

And heigh-ho for the honour of old England. Dryden.

HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the ground; any place assigned.

Into what pit thou see'st,

From what height fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

2. Altitude; space measured upwards.

Abroad I'll study thee,

As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.

There is in Ticinium, in Italy, a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon's Natural History.

An amphitheatre appear'd,

Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;

That when a man was plac'd in one degree,

Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

An amphitheatre's amazing height

Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.

3. Degree of latitude.

Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South. Abbot's Description of the World.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;

His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryden's Æn.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,

I never did incense his majesty

Against Clarence. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,

When England to her greatest height attain'd,

Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth and state. Daniel.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.

Did not she

Of Timna first betray me, and reveal

The secret, wrested from me in the height

Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton's Agonistes.

Hide me from the face

Of God, whom to behold was then my height

Of happiness! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection.

Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addis.

TO HE'IGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states gave us their assistance in reducing our country to a state of peace; and which of them used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war? Addison's Freeholder.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden's Span. Fryar, Dedication.

HE'INOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from hain, hate; or from the Teutonick hoon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege.

Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:

The image of a wicked heinous fault

Lives in his eye.

Shakespeare's King John.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us.

Tillotson's Sermons.

HE'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HE'INOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences provoking to God as jests and trifles, must have very little sense of the heinousness of them.

Rogers's Sermons.

HEIR. n. f. [heire, old Fr. hæres, Latin.] One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land.

Locke.

What lady is that?

—The heir of Alanfon, Rosaline her name.

Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,

God knows, I will not do it.

Shakesp. Richard III.

Being heirs together of the grace of life.

Pet. iii. 7.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate before things grew desperate.

Swift.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,

And I his heir in misery alone.

Pope's Odyssey.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions.

Swift.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;

One only daughter heir'd the royal state.

Dryden's Æn.

HE'IRESS. n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;

All that was her's to him did give.

Waller.

Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law.

Dryd.

HE'IRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of

The wrong I did myself; which was so much,

That heirless it hath made my kingdom.

Shakesp. Wint. Tale.

HE'IRSHIP. n. f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

HE'IRLOOM. n. f. [heir and geloma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,

Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings

Came an heirloom, as Homer sings.

Swift.

HELD. The preterite and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends.

Ecclus.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design.

Dryden.

HEL'ACAL. adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent.

Brown.

HE'LIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emerfion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days.

Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically.

Dryden.

HE'LICAL. adv. [helice, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vertex at one end of it.

Wilkins.

HE'LIOD Parabolæ, in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle.

Harris.

HELIOCE'NTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος, and κέντρον.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre.

Harris.

HE'LIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, Fr. ἥλιος and σκοπέω.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes.

Harris.

HE'LIOTROPE. n. f. [ἥλιος and τρέπω; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turnfol, or sun-flower.

'Tis a common observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather.

Government of the Tongue.

HE'LISPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]

The helihspherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it.

Harris.

HE'LIX. n. f. [helice, Fr. ἥλιος.] A spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the certain quantity of water which every helix does contain.

Wilkins's Dædalus.

HELL. n. f. [helle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may best

Deserve the precious bane.

Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold

The glorious light he forfeited of old.

Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down to my son mourning to hell.

Gen. vi. 35.

He descended into hell.

Apostles Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me.

Psalms xviii. 4.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,

That they, as well as they, hell may supply.

Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had, as well

As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;

Not with a counterfeited pass

Of golden bough, but true gold lace.

Hudibras, p. i.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell.

King's Cookery.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much did he sustain,

While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain.

Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,

And quench'd the stelled fires.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,

With foul enfouldred smoak and flashing fire,

The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.

Fairy Queen.

HELL-BROTH. n. f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;

For a charm of pow'ful trouble,

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,

Hell-doom'd! and breath't defiance here and scorn,

Where I reign king?

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and eat him quick,

As thou do'st swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd.

Shak. R. III.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,

With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart.

Shak. K. Lear.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,

And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,

And Winter's storms, and heav'n's inclemency,

Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove.

Dryden.

HELL-HOUND. n. f. [helle hund, Saxon.]

1. Dogs of hell.

Thou had'st a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him:

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death.

Shakesp. R. III.

Now the hell-hounds with superior speed

Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,

The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd.

Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd

HEL

I call'd

My hell-hounds to lick up the draff, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

HELL-KITE. n. f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

All my pretty ones?

Did you say all? What, all? Oh, hell-kite! all?

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop?

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

HELLEBORE. n. f. [helleborus, Latin.] Christmas flower.

It hath a digitated leaf: the flower consists of several leaves placed orbicularly, and expanding in form of a rose: in the centre of the flower rises the pointal, encompassed about the base with several little horns between the chives and petals, which turn to a fruit, in which the membranaceous husks are gathered into a little head, ending in an horn, opening longwise, and full of roundish or oval seeds. Miller.

HELLEBORE White. n. f. [veratrum, Latin.] A plant.

The flower is naked, consisting of six leaves, expanding in form of a rose: in the middle arises the pointal, surrounded by six threads, which turn to a fruit; in which three membranaceous sheaths are gathered into a little head, and are full of oblong seeds resembling a grain of wheat, and compassed by a leafy wing. Miller.

There are great doubts whether any of its species be the true hellebore of the ancients. Miller.

HELLENISM. n. f. [ἑλληνισμός.] An idiom of the Greek.

Ainsworth.

HELLISH. adj. [from hell.]

1. Having the qualities of hell; infernal; wicked; detestable.

No benefits shall ever allay that diabolical rancour that ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander.

South's Sermons.

Victory and triumph to the son of God,

Now entering his great duel, not of arms,

But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles. Paradise Regain'd.

2. Sent from hell; belonging to hell.

O thou celestial or infernal spirit of love, or what other heavenly or hellish title thou list to have, for effects of both I find in myself, have compassion of me.

Sidney, b. i.

HELLISHLY. adv. [from hellish.] Infernally; wickedly; detestably.

HELLISHNESS. n. f. [from hellish.] Wickedness; abhorred qualities.

HELLWARD. adv. [from hell.] Towards hell.

Be next thy care the fable sheep to place

Full o'er the pit, and hellward turn their face. Pope's Odyss.

HELM denotes defence: as Eadhelm, happy defence; Sighelm, victorious defence; Berthelm, eminent defence: like Amyntas and Boetius among the Greeks.

Gibson's Camden.

HELM. n. f. [helm, Saxon, from helan, to cover, to protect.]

1. A covering for the head in war; a helmet; a morrion; an headpiece.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;

With plumed helm thy slay'r begins his threats. Shakespeare.

Mnestheus lays hard load upon his helm.

Dryden.

2. The part of a coat of arms that bears the crest.

More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters.

Camden's Remains.

3. The upper part of the retort.

The vulgar chymists themselves pretend to be able, by repeated cohobations, and other fit operations, to make the distilled parts of a concrete bring its own caput mortuum over the helm.

Boyle.

4. [helma, Saxon.] The steerage; the rudder.

They did not leave the helm in storms!

And such they are make happy states. Ben. Jonson. Catiline.

More in prosperity is reason tost

Than ships in storms, their helms and anchors lost. Denb.

Fair occasion shews the springing gale,

And int'rest guides the helm, and honour swells the sail. Pri.

5. The station of government.

I may be wrong in some of the means; but that is no material objection against the design: let those who are at the helm contrive it better.

Swift.

6. In the following line it is difficult to determine whether steersman or defender is intended: I think steersman.

You slander

The helms o' th' state, who care for you like fathers,

When you curse them as enemies.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

TO HELM. v. a. [from the noun.] To guide; to conduct. Hanmer.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.

1. Furnished with a headpiece.

The helmed cherubim

Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd. Milton.

HELMET. n. f. [Probably a diminutive of helm.] A helm; a headpiece; armour for the head.

HEL

I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;

From helmet to the spur all bleeding o'er. Shakespeare. H. V.

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,

That they may crush down with a heavy fall

Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Sev'n darts are thrown at once, and some rebound

From his bright shield, some on his helmet sound. Dryden.

HELMINTHICK. adj. [from ἑλμινθ.] Relating to worms.

Dict.

TO HELP. v. a. preter. helped, or help; part. helped, or holpen. [hilpan, Gothick; helfan, Saxon.]

1. To assist; to support; to aid.

Let us work as valiant men behoves;

For boldest hearts good fortune helpeth out. Fairfax, b. ii.

God helped him against the Philistines. 2 Chron. xxvi. 7.

They helped them in all things with silver and gold. 1 Esdr.

A man reads his prayers out of a book, as a means to help his understanding and direct his expressions. Stillingfleet.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,

If all of you should join to help him out. Dryden.

What I offer is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause these gentlemen are engaged in, that it does them a real service, and helps them out with the main thing whereat they stuck.

Woodward's Natural History.

The god of learning and of light,

Would want a god himself to help him out. Swift.

2. To remove, or advance by help.

Woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

Muleasses, despairing to recover the city, hardly escaped his enemies hands by the good help of his uncle.

Knolles.

HEM

He may be beholden to experience and acquired notions, where he thinks he has not the least help from them. Locke.

So great is the stupidity of some of those, that they may have no sense of the help administered to them. Smalridge.

2. That which forwards or promotes.

Coral is in use as an help to the teeth of children. Bacon.

3. That which gives help.

Though these contrivances increase the power, yet they proportionably protract the time: that which by such helps one man may do in a hundred days, may be done by the immediate strength of a hundred men in one day. Wilkins.

Virtue is a friend and an help to nature; but it is vice and luxury that destroys it, and the diseases of intemperance are the natural product of the sins of intemperance. South.

Another help St. Paul himself affords us towards the attaining the true meaning contained in his epistles. Locke.

4. Remedy.

There is no help for it, but he must be taught accordingly to comply with that faulty way of writing. Holder on Speech.

HE'LPER. n. f. [from help.]

1. An assistant; an auxiliary; an aider; one that helps or assists.

There was not any left, nor any helper for Israel. 2 Kings.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth. 3 Jo. viii.

It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. One that administers remedy.

Compassion, the mother of tears, is not always a mere idle spectator, but an helper oftentimes of evils. More.

3. A supernumerary servant.

I live in the corner of a vast unfurnished house: my family consists of a steward, a groom, a helper in the stable, a footman, and an old maid. Swift to Pope.

4. One that supplies with any thing wanted.

Heaven

Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,

As it hath fated her to be my motive

And helper to a husband. Shak. All's well that ends well.

HE'LPFUL. adj. [help and full.]

1. Useful; that which gives assistance.

Let's fight with gentle words,

'Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords. Sh.

He orders all the succours which they bring;

The helpful and the good about him run,

And form an army. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. Wholesome; salutary.

A skilful chymist can as well, by separation of visible elements, draw helpful medicines out of poison, as poison out of the most healthful herbs. Raleigh's History of the World.

HE'LPLESS. adj. [from help.]

1. Wanting power to succour one's self.

One dire shot

Close by the board the prince's main-mast bore;

All three now helpless by each other lie. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

Let our enemies rage and persecute the poor and the helpless; but let it be our glory to be pure and peaceable. Rogers.

2. Wanting support or assistance.

How shall I then your helpless fame defend?

'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend. Pope.

3. Irremediable; admitting no help.

Such helpless harms it's better hidden keep,

Than rip up grief, where it may not avail. Fairy Queen.

4. Unsupplied; void.

Naked he lies, and ready to expire,

Helpless of all that human wants require. Dryden.

HE'LPLESSLY. adv. [from helpless.] Without succour; without ability.

HE'LPLESSNESS. n. f. [from helpless.] Want of succour; want of ability.

HELTHER-SKELTER. adv. [As Skinner fancies, from heol'ten pceado, the darkness of hell; hell, says he, being a place of confusion.] In a hurry; without order; tumultuously.

Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend;

And helther-skelter have I rode to England,

And tidings do I bring. Shakespeare's Henry V.

He had no sooner turned his back but they were at it helther-skelter, throwing books at one another's heads. L'Estrange.

HELVE. n. f. [helpe, Saxon.] The handle of an axe.

The slipping of an axe from the helve, whereby another is slain, was the work of God himself. Raleigh's History.

Along the shoar of silver streaming Thames,

Whose rushy bank, the which his river hems. Spenser.

3. To enclose; to environ; to confine; to shut.

So of either side, stretching itself in a narrow length, was it hemmed in by woody hills, as if indeed nature had meant therein to make a place for beholders. Sidney, b. ii.

What lets us then the great Jerusalem

With valiant squadrons round about to hem. Fairfax, b. i.

Why, Neptune, hast thou made us stand alone,

Divided from the world for this, say they;

Hemm'd in to be a spoil to tyranny,

Leaving affliction hence no way to fly? Daniel's Civ. War.

I hurry me in haste away,

And find his honour in a pound,

Hemni'd by a triple circle round,

Chequer'd with ribbons, blue and green. Pope.

HE'MISPHERE. n. f. [ἡμισφαίριον; hemisphere, French.]

The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.

That place is earth, the seat of man; that light

His day, which else, as th' other hemisphere,

Night would invade. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

God saw the light was good,

And light from darkness by the hemisphere

Divided. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

A hill

Of Paradise, the highest from whose top

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken

Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay. Milt. P. L.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,

Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;

So in this hemisphere our utmost view

Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHE'RICAL. } adj. [from hemisphere.] Half round;

HEMISPHE'RICK. } containing half a globe.

The thin film of water swells above the surface of the water it swims on, and commonly constitutes hemispherical bodies with it. Boyle.

HE'MISTICK. n. f. [ἡμιστίχιον; hemistichie, Fr.] Half a verse.

He broke off in the hemistick, or midst of the verse; but seized, as it were, with a divine fury, he made up the latter part of the hemistick. Dryden's Dufresny.

HE'MLOCK. n. f. hemloc, Saxon.] An herb.

The leaves are cut into many minute segments: the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped, and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channelled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious; but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different. Miller.

He was met even now,

As mad as the vext sea, singing aloud;

Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,

With hardocks, hemlock. Shakesp. King Lear.

We cannot with certainty affirm, that no man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock. Locke.

HE'MORRHAGE. } n. f. [αιμορραγία; hemorrhagic, French.] A HE'MORRHAGY. } violent flux of blood.

Of leeches, spouting hemorrhoidal blood. Garth's Dispensat.

HEMP. n. f. [hænep, Saxon; hampe, Dutch.] A fibrous plant of which coarse linen and ropes are made.
It hath digitated leaves opposite to one another: the flowers have no visible petals; it is male and female in different plants. It is propagated in the rich fenny parts of Lincolnshire in great quantities for its bark, which is useful for cordage, cloth, &c. and the seed affords an oil used in medicine. Miller.

Let gallows go for dog; let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakef. Hen. V.
Hemp and flax are commodities that deserve encouragement, both for their usefulness and profit. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HEMP Agrimony. n. f. A plant.
The common hemp agrimony is found wild by ditches and sides of rivers. Miller.

HE'MPEN. adj. [from hemp.] Made of hemp.
In foul reproach of knighthood's fair degree,
About his neck a hempen rope he wears. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing. Shak. Hen. V.
Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.
I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee;
He wist not when the hempen string I drew. Gay.

HEN. n. f. [penne, Saxon and Dutch; han, German, a cock.]
1. The female of a house-cock.
2. The female of any land-fowl.
The peacock, pheasant, and goldfinch cocks have glorious colours; the bens have not. Bacon's Natural History.
Whilst the hen bird is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison's Spectator.
The wild duck hence
O'er the rough moss, and o'er the trackless waste
The heath ben flutters. Thomson's Spring.

HEN-PECKED. adj. [hen and pecked.] Governed by the wife.
A stepdame too I have, a curst she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dryd. Virgil.
The neighbours reported that he was hen-pecked, which was impossible, by such a mild-spirited woman as his wife. Arbuthn.

HEN-ROOST. n. f. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry rest.
Many a poor devil stands to a whipping post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost. L'Estr.
Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourageth to rob his hen-roosts. Swift.
If a man prosecutes gipsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. Addison's Spectator.
They oft have sally'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Tickell.

HENS-FEET. n. f. A kind of plant. Ainsworth.

HE'NBANE. n. f. [hyoscyamus, Latin.] A plant.
The leaves are soft and hairy, growing alternately upon the branches: the cup of the flower is short, bell-shaped, and divided into five segments: the flower consists of one leaf, the bottom part of which is tubelose, but is expanded at the top, and divided into five segments, having five obtuse stamina: the fruit, which is inclosed within the calyx, resembles a pot with a cover to it, and is divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many small seeds. It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.
That to which old Socrates was curs'd,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em 'till they burst. Dryden.

HE'NBIT. n. f. A plant.
In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-feed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Phys. Theology.

HENCE. adv. or interj. [heonan, Saxon; hennes, old English.]
1. From this place to another.
Discharge my follow'rs; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolinbroke's fair day. Shak. R. II.
Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton's P. L.
A sullen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud and impertinence. Roscommon.

2. Away; to a distance.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shak. Macb.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.

3. At a distance; in other place.
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth? Shakespeare.
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinewed to this action. Shakef. Henry IV.

4. From this time; in the future.

H E P

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.
Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants. Arbuthnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.
Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

6. From this cause; from this ground.
By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.
My Flora was my fun; for as
One fun, so but one Flora was:
All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace, as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten.
An ancient author prophesy'd from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince!
From the same parts of heav'n his navy stands,
To the same parts on earth. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.
Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curst. Sidney.

HENCEFO' RTH. adv. [henonforð, Saxon.] From this time forward.
Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakef. Henry VI.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
'Till day droop. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come? Dryden.

HENCEFO' RWARD. adv. [hence and forward.] From this time to all futurity.
Henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shakef. Henry VI.
Henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than lord Mortimer. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shak. Romeo and Jul.
The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endued with good qualities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

HE'NCHMAN. n. f. [hync, a servant, and man, Skinner; hengre, a horse, and man, Spelman.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman. Shakespeare's Midf. Night's Dream.
Three henchmen were for ev'ry knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden.

To HEND. v. a. [henban, Saxon, from hendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hond, Teutonic.]
1. To seize; to lay hold on.
With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain. Fairfax, b. ii.

2. To croud; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed.
The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shakef. Meas. for Measure.

HE'NDECAGON. n. f. [ēvdena and γωνία.] A figure of eleven sides or angles.

HEPA'TICAL. } adj. [hepaticus, Latin; hepatique, French, from HEPA'TICK. } ἥπαρ.] Belonging to the liver.
If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it's hepatick. Harvey on Consumptions.
The cystick gall is thick, and intensely bitter; the hepatick gall is more fluid, and not so bitter. Arbuthn. on Aliments.

HEPS. n. f. Hawthorn-berries, commonly written hips. Ainsw.
In hard Winters there is observed great plenty of heps and haws, which preserve the small birds from starving. Bacon.

HEPTACA'PSULAR. adj. [ἑπτά and capsula.] Having seven cavities or cells.

HEPTAGON. n. f. [heptagone, French; ἑπτά and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTA'GONAL. adj. [from heptagon.] Having seven angles or sides.

HE'PTARCHY. n. f. [heptarchie, Fr. ἑπτά and ἀρχή.] A seven-fold government.
In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.
England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour

Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,

His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER. pron. [hepa, pen, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman:

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth. Shakefp. As you like it.

Still new favourites she chose,

'Till up in arms my passion rose,

And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,

Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;

Wond'rous beautiful her face;

But so weak and small her wit,

That she to govern were unfit,

And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,

Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,

And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,

With thousand stars attending on her train;

With her they rise, with her they set again. Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,

That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are hers.

This pride of hers,

Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakespeare.

Thine own unworthiness,

Will still that thou art mine not hers confess. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,

And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,

Indeed to save a crown, not hers, but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n.f. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace:

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,

For strict degrees of rank or title look;

'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,

And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,

And I'll appear again. Shakefp. King Lear.

After my death I wish no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakef. Hen. VIII.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;

Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,

Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shak. Julius Caesar.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakespeare.

To HE'RALD. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as an herald. A word not used.

We are sent

To give thee from our royal master thanks;

Only to herald thee into his fight,

Not pay thee. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HE'RALDRY. n.f. [heraulderie, French, from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran

In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden's Juvenal.

'Twas no false heraldry, when madness drew

Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

2. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleaveland.

HERB. n.f. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock.

In such a night

Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs

That did renew old Æson. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

With sweet-swelling herbs

Espos'd Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie

Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts's Logick.

Herb eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HERB Christopher, or Bane-berries. n.f. A plant.

The flower consists of five leaves, placed orbicularly in form of a rose: in its centre arises the ovary, which becomes a soft fruit or berry of an oval shape, and filled with seeds in a double row, which for the most part adhere together. Miller.

HERBA'CEOUS. adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables.

Their teeth are fitted to their food; the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham's Phys. Theology.

HE'RBAGE. n.f. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grass; pasture:

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;

Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields. Dryden.

At the time the deluge came the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. The tythe and the right of pasture. Ainsworth.

HE'RBAL. n.f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and description of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history. Bacon's Natural History.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Bro.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. More's Antid. against Atheism.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants. Baker.

HE'RBALIST. n.f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have thus distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit and apples rounder. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

HE'RBAR. n.f. [A word, I believe, only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

The roof hereof was arched over head,

And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily. Fairy Queen.

HE'RBARIST. n.f. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much sway'd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours or multiplicity of leaves in the flower were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray on the Creation.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist. Derham's Phys. Theology.

HE'RBELET. n.f. [Diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

Even so

These herbelets shall, which we upon you strow. Shakefp.

HERBE'SCENT. adj. [herbescens, Latin.] Growing into herbs.

HE'RBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HE'RBORIST. n.f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HE'RBOROUGH. n.f. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbour.

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough; said he was taken and committed upon suspicion of treason, no witness appearing against him. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

I, upon my frontiers here,
Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins
Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
While he his second mis'ry suffers here!

To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:
'Tis finish'd, and the dusk that yet remains
Is but the native horror of the wood. Dryden's K. Arthur.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;
To him who was the king, the friend replies. Prior.

4. It is often oppos'd to there. Dispersedly; in one place and another.

Good-night: mine eyes do itch;
Doth that bode weeping?

—'Tis neither here nor there. Shakespeare's Othello.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;
Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon's Essays.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single proselyte. Gover. of the Tongue.

You remember how your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets in any one part; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt's Sermons.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another. Locke.

5. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shakesp. K. Lear.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.] About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs
From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Hereafter he from war shall come,
And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREA'T. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean. Hooker, b. ii.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: here- by we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adj. [hæres, Latin.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditable, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HE'REDITAMENT. n. f. [hæredium, Latin.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HERE'DITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French; hereditarius, Lat.]

Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare:

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakespeare.

He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign
With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heav'ns. Milt.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.

When heroick verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.

HERE'DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker, b. v.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakespeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

into question. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi.

HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from ere- mite, of ἔρημος, a desert; heremitique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HE'RESY. n. f. [heresie, French; hæresis, Latin; ἁίρεσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker, b. iii.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon mens wits; yet they do not produce any great alterations in states.

Bacon, Essay 59.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HERESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarque, French; ἡρεσιάρχης and ἡρεσιάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of hereticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretick, but an heresiarch. Stillington.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. ἡρετικός.] One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father: Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts's Logick.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

Lord Amphialus, said she, I have long desired to know your heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South's Sermons.

We now can form no more
Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismayed,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Fai. Queen.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surpris'd by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT. n. f. [herigild, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleaveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] A person that may inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.
Let us our father's heritage divide. Hubberd's Tale.
He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers's Sermons.
2. [In divinity.] The people of God.
O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Com. Pr.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaphrodite, French, from ἑρμῆς and Ἀφροδίτη.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaphrodite. Cleaveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites. Arbuthn. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermes, or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chimick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.
A wither'd hermit, fivescore Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
You were pleased to lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison on Italy.
Come, inspiration, from thy hermit seat,
By mortals seldom found. Thomson's Summer.
2. A beadleman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.
For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass
Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shakespeare.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.
About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison on Italy.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἑρμῆς and δάκτυλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots, which we have, are a gentle purge; but they are now little used. Hill's Mat. Med.

HERN. n. f. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peacham on Drawing.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wise's Surgery.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.
In which were held, by sad decease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman's Odyssey.
I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.
These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.
Heroes, kings,
Joy thy wish'd approach to see. Wells.
2. A man of the highest class in any respect.

HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; herois, Latin.] A heroine; a female hero.

In which were held, by sad decease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman's Odyssey.

HER

HERO'ICAL. adj. [from hero.] Besitting an hero; heroick.
Mufidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprizes. Sidney, b. ii.
Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden's Fables, Dedic.

HERO'ICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero.
Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney, b. ii.
Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HERO'ICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, French.]

1. Productive of heroes.
Bolingbroke
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.
Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give. Waller.
3. Reciting the acts of heroes.
Methinks heroick poesy, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.
I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden's Ann. Mirab. Preface.
An heroick poem is the greatest which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HERO'ICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton's Agonistes.

HE'ROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroefs.
But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.
Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HE'ROISM. n. f. [heroïsme, French.] The qualities or character of an hero.
If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome's Notes to the Odyssey.

HE'RON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.
So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.
The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.
2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.
The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HE'RONRY. n. f. [from heron; commonly pronounced hern.]
HE'RONSHAW. n. f. [ry.] A place where herons breed.
They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HE'RPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers, if not timely taken care of. Quincy.
A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wise's Surgery.

HE'RRING. n. f. [hareng, French; hæring, Saxon.] A small sea-fish.
The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackrel, and cod. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers.
How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.
Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.
I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from herman, to praise.]

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

HET

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.
When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscom.
Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born;
Their friends attend the herse, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil's Georg. b. iv.
On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent *herse*s shall besiege your gates. Pope.

TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse.
I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
The Grecians spritely drew from the darts the corse,
And herse'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliads.
The house is herse'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree:
Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good;
Each herb a plague. Crashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun. The female personal pronoun, in the oblique cases reciprocal.
The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakesp. Rich. III.
The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.
Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

TO HE'RY. v. a. [herman, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.
Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Past.
Thenceforth it firmly was established,
And for Apollo's honour highly heried. Fairy Queen.
But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
And hery with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.
The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.
Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.
A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Broome's Notes on the Iliad.
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITA'TION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward's Natural History.
2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.
Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hæst, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction.
If thou be the most kind preserver
Of living wights, the sovereign lord of all,
How falls it then, that, with thy furious fervour,
Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.
Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests. Shakespeare's Tempest.

HE'TEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίω.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
The heteroclite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.
2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLI'TICAL. adj. [from heteroclite.] Deviating from the common rule.
Of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or president, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HE'TERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξία and δόξα.]
Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogene, French; ἕτερος and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon's Natural History.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton's Opt.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogeneité, Fr. from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.
2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [ἕτερος and γένος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have with great care observed the condition of such heterogeneous bodies, which I found immersed and included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. f. [ἕτερος and σκία.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.

TO HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.
I had purpose

Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayw.

2. To chop; to cut.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakefp.
He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd. Fables.

3. To fell, as with an ax.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakesf. H. VI.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton's Parad. Lost.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. If. xxii. 16.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformation by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mort.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; ἑξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.

HEXA'GONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramb. against Hobbs.

HEXA'METER. n. f. [ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HEXA'NGULAR. adj. [ἑξ and angulus, Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal, of various sizes, some clear, and others a little soiled. Woodward on Fossils.

HEXA'POD. n. f. [ἑξ and πόδες.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray on the Creation.

HEXA'STICK. n. f. [ἑξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyrick;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HE'YDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras, p. i.

HE'YDAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HE'YDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance.

But friendly fairys met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenser.

HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open its mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBE'RNAL. adj. [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the Winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccus doccus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras, p. iii.

HICCO'UGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an eccho supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cicaveland.

Sneezing cureth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows, with vomiting and nausea. Wiseman's Surgery.

TO HI'CCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

TO HI'CKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my eats to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hickup. Hudibras, p. ii.

HI'CKWALL. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.

HI'CKWAY. } n. f. A road.

HID. } part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be atchiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope's Epist.

TO HIDE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hioan, Saxon.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avaunt, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shak.

H I D

His reasons are as two grains of wheat bid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dr.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The sev'ral parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection? Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is filled with peace. Rowe's Royal Convert.

TO HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.
A fox, that had been hard run, begged of a countryman, at work in a wood, to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,
Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.
The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Gulliver's Travels.

HIDE. n. s. [hýðe, Saxon; haude, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.
The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.
Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope's Odyssey.
2. The human skin: in contempt.
Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakesp.
His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.
3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Ainsworth.
One of the first things was the perfecting of the Winchester book, being a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farriers Dict.
2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.
A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon's Natural History.
Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.
3. Harsh; untractable.
And still the harsher and hidebounder,
The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras, p. ii.
4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEIOUS. adj. [hideux, French.] Horrible; dreadful; shocking.
If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney, b. ii.

Thou echo'st me,
As if there were some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shakespeare's Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden's Æn.

'Tis forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural History.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.
I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakesp. Henry IV.

H I E

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. s. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness; terrour.

HIDER. n. s. [from the verb.] He that hides.

TO HIE. v. n. [hiegan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.
When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 2.
In a fair moon-shine night thither he hies to dig it up.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shakespeare.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shak. Ju. Cæs.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel's Civ. War.

The snake no sooner hie,
But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd. Craspaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a curfed hour, he hies. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.
Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Craspaw.

HIERARCH. n. s. [ἱερχ and ἱερχν; hierarque, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.
Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milt. Parad. Lost.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, French; from hierarch] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. s. [hierarchie, French, from hierar. h.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings:
Out of the hierarchies of angels slien,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax, b. i.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton's Par. Lost.

Jehova, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

The blessed of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.
The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.
While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.
Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. s. [hieroglyphe, French; ἱερός, sacred,
HIEROGLYPHICK. } and γλύφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented.
This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The first writing they used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.
No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the HIEROGLYPHICK. } noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.
In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys's Travels.

Th' Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, tion, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [ἱερός and γραφία.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱεροφάντης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends.

Bafe thou art!

To higgle thus for a few blows,

To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse. Hudibras, p. ii.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a poultry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higgles carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [peap, Saxon; hoogb, Dutch.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Sh. R. III.

Their andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryd. Æn.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabrick; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
To bear high fortune, or endure the low. Dryden's Æn.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aimed beyond

Higher design than to enjoy his state. Milton.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things. Shakesp.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

—Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked so high blood.—It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.

He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakesp.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,

Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost. Denham.

Spiders cannot easily weave their nets in a high wind.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up

In its full fury. Addison's Cato.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Not only tears

Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,

Began to rise; high passions, anger,

Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook fore

Their inward state of mind. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,

Or exercise their spight in human woe? Dryden's Æn.

13. Full; complete.

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair,

To think of those her captive parents dear. Fairy Queen.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?

High time it is this war now ended were. Spenser.

It was high time to do so; for it was now certain, that forces were already upon their march towards the West. Clarendon.

It was high time for the lords to look about them. Clarend.

14. Strong tasted; gustful.

Solomon liv'd at ease, and full

Of honour, wealth, high fare, aim'd not beyond

Higher design than to enjoy his state. Milt. Parad. Lost.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies.

Baker's Reflections on Learning.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high to the North, or low to the South. Abbot's Description of the World.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered. Gen. xxix. 7.

17. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week, is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets. Brown's Vulgar Err.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper. South's Sermons.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH. n. f. High place; elevation; superiour region.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high,

He sigh'd. Dryden.

On HIGH. Aloft; above; into superiour regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,

With adamantine columns threatens the sky. Dryden's Æn.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;

But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n

So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,

Hard to belief may seem. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,

These many Summers on a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me,

Weary, and old with service, to the mercy

Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Sh. H. VIII.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.

Cast round your eyes

Upon the high-born beauties of the court;

There chuse some worthy partner of your heart. Rowe.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.

1. Of lofty structure.

I know him by his stride,

The giant Harapha of Gath; his look

Haughty as is his pile, high-built and proud. Milt. Agonistes.

2. Covered with lofty buildings.

In dreadful wars

The high-built elephant his castle rears,

Looks down on man below, and strikes the stars. Creech.

HIGH-COLOURED. Having a deep or glaring colour.

If a fever happens in a rancid oily state of blood, it produces a scorbutick fever, with high-coloured urine, and spots in the skin.

HIGH-DESIGNING. Having great schemes.

His warlike mind, his soul devoid of fear,

His high-designing thoughts were figur'd there. Dryden.

HIGH-FED. Pampered.

A favourite mule, high-fed, and in the pride of flesh and metal, would still be bragging of his family. L'Estrange.

HIGH-FLAMING. Throwing the flame to a great height.

Hecatombs of bulls to Neptune slain,

High-flaming, please the monarch of the main. Pope.

HIGH-FLIER. n. f. One that carries his opinions to extravagance.

She openly professeth herself to be a high-flier; and it is not improbable she may also be a papist at heart. Swift.

HIGH-FLOWN. adj. [high and flown, from fly.]

1. Elevated; proud.

This stiff-neckt pride nor art nor force can bend,

Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

2. Turgid; extravagant.

This fable is a high-flown hyperbole upon the miseries of marriage. L'Estrange.

HIGH-FLYING. Extravagant in claims or opinions.

Clip the wings

Of their high-flying arbitrary kings. Dryd. Virgil.

HIGH-HEAPED. adj.

1. Covered with high piles.

H I G

- The plenteous board high-beap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.
2. Raised into high piles.
I saw myself the vast unnumber'd store
Of brags, high-beap'd amidst the regal dome. Pope's Odyssey.
- HIGH-HEEL'D. Having the heel of the shoe much raised.
By these embroider'd high-heel'd shoes,
She shall be caught as in a noose. Swift.
- HI'GH-HUNG. Hung aloft.
By the high-hung taper's light,
I could discern his cheeks were glowing red. Dryden.
- HIGH-METTLED. Proud or ardent of spirit.
He fails not in these to keep a stiff rein on a high-mettled Pegasus; and takes care not to surfeit here, as he had done on other heads, by an erroneous abundance. Garth.
- HIGH-MINDED. Proud; arrogant.
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakesf. H. VI.
Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith: be not high-minded, but fear. Rom. ii. 20.
- HIGH-PRINCIPLED. Extravagant in notions of politicks.
This seems to be the political creed of all the high-principled men I have met with. Swift.
- HIGH-RED. Deeply red.
Oil of turpentine, though clear as water, being digested upon the purely white sugar of lead, has in a short time afforded a high-red tincture. Boyle on Colours.
- HIGH-SEASONED. Piquant to the palate.
Be sparing also of salt in the seasoning of all his victuals, and use him not to high-seasoned meats. Locke.
- HIGH-SIGHTED. Always looking upwards.
Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
'Till each man drop by lottery;
But if these countrymen bear fire enough,
What need we any spur but our own cause? Shakespeare.
- HIGH-SPIRITED. Bold; daring; insolent.
- HIGH-STOMACHED. Obstinate; lofty.
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-TASTED. Gustful; piquant.
Flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tasted meats conveys. Denham.
- HIGH-VICED. Enormously wicked.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
- HI'GH-WROUGHT. Accurately finished; nobly laboured.
Thou triumph'st, victor of the high-wrought day,
And the pleas'd dame, soft smiling, lead'st away. Pope.
- HI'GHLAND. n. f. [high and land] Mountainous region.
The wond'ring moon
Beholds her brother's steeds beneath her own;
The highlands smok'd, cleft by the piercing rays. Addison.
Ladies in the highlands of Scotland use this discipline to their children in the midst of Winter, and find that cold water does them no harm. Locke.
- HIGHLANDER. n. f. [from highland.] An inhabitant of mountains.
His cabinet council of highlanders. Addison.
- HI'GHLY. adv. [from high.]
1. With elevation as to place and situation.
  2. In a great degree.
Whatever expedients can allay those heats, which break us into different factions, cannot but be useful to the publick, and highly tend to its safety. Addison's Freeholder.
It cannot but be highly requisite for us to support and enliven our faith, by dwelling often on the same considerations.
Atterbury's Sermons.
  3. Proudly; arrogantly; ambitiously.
What thou wouldst highly,
That thou wouldst holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win. Shakesp. Macbeth.
  4. With esteem; with estimation.
Every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. Rom. xii. 3.
- HI'GHMOST. adj. [An irregular word.] Highest; topmost.
Now is the sun upon the highmost hill
Of this day's journey; and from nine 'till twelve,
Is three long hours. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
- HI'GHNESS. n. f. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the surface.
  2. The title of princes, anciently of kings.
Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than that your highness offer'd. Shakespeare.
How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
A perfect princess, ere her highness came? Waller.
Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness. Dryden.
  3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.
Destruction from God was a terrour to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure. Job xxxi. 23.
- HIGHT. [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite

H I L

- tense with a passive signification: hazan, to call, Saxon; hessen, to be called, German.]
1. Was named; was called.
The city of the great king hight it well,
Wherein eternal peace and happiness doth dwell. Fa. Queen.
Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer
For crowing loud, the noble Chanticleer,
So hight her cock. Dryden's Nun's Priest.
  2. It is sometimes used as a participle passive, and signifies called;
named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings.
Amongst the rest a good old woman was,
Hight mother Hubberd. Hubberd's Tale.
- HIGHWATER. n. f. [high and water.] The utmost flow of the tide.
They have a good way in Essex of draining of lands that lie below the highwater, and that are something above the low-water mark. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- HIGHWAY. n. f. [high and way.] Great road; publick path.
So few there be
That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right:
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appius, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator. Addison.
Ent'ring on a broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found. Swift.
I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose. Child on Trade.
- HI'GHWAYMAN. n. f. [highway and man.] A robber that plun-ders on the publick roads.
'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley's Sermons.
A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery. Swift.
- HI'GLAPER. n. f. An herb. Ainworth.
- HILARITY. n. f. [hilaritas, Latin] Merriment; gayety.
Ayerroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence from wine. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- HILD, in Ælrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mahtild, an heroick lady; and in the same sense is Wiga also found. Gib. Camden.
- HI'LDING. n. f. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate. Hughes's Spensf.]
1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.
He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect. Shakesf. All's well that ends well.
You are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence o' th' crown, and must not foil
The precious note of it with a base slave,
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth. Shak. Cymbeline.
This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at naught. Rowe's Jane Shore.
  2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shak. Rom. and Jul.
- HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.
My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney, b. ii.
Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax:
Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise espy'd;
But mighty bulkwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax, b. iii.
When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view. Granville.
A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plastick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
- HI'LOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.
Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
What, judge you, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus!
Sidney, b. i.
Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.
This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison on Italy.
- HI'LLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.
Towards the hilly corners of Druina remain yet her very Aborigenes, fatally thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.
Howel's Vocal Forrest.
Climbing

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Dryden.

Lo! how the Norick plains

Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Phillips.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, tho' man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison.

HILT. n. f. [hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shakesp. Henry V.

Take thou the hilt,

And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope's Odyssey.

HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restor'd unto my office, and him he hanged. Gen. xli.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one

Of the same herd, himself the same had done. Denham.

2. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd

Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself. Shakespeare.

3. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set awork by a reproveable badness in himself. Shakesp. K. Lear.

4. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.

HIN. n. f. [hin, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Ex. xxix. 40.

HIND. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost. [hynban, Saxon.]

Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far 'till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray on the Creation.

The stag

Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,

And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

HIND. n. f. [hinde, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he flew, with glancing dart amiss,

A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy

Did love as life.

Fairy Queen, b. i.

Can'st thou mark when the hinds do calve? Job xxxix. 1.

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,

Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew. Dryden's Æn.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. [hineman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,

To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield,

Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,

And sheets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.

He cloth'd himself in coarse array,

A lab'ring hind in fiew.

Dryden's Fables.

HINDBERRIES. n. f. The same as raspberries. Ainsworth.

TO HINDER. v. a. [hynban, Saxon.] To obstruct; to stop; to let; to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way.

Gen. xxiv. 56.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wisd. xvii. 20.

You minimus of hindring knot-grafs made;

You bead, you acorn. Shakespeare's Midf. Night's Dream.

If the alms were hindered only by intreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because intreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commander, enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden's Juv. Dedicat.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right? Locke.

HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That which is in a position contrary to that of the face.

These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney, b. i.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back. Addison's Guardian.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions more pernicious than the first; yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first. Hooker, Preface.

They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,

One soul should both inspire, and neither prove

His fellow's hind'rance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice. Atterbury.

HINDERER. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May.

HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost. Gen.

Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,

And leave you hindermost. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now Shakesp. H. VI.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deutr. xxv. 18.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,

The first of this, and hindmost of the last,

A losing gamester.

Dryden's Aurengz. Prologue.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;

So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run. Pope.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns,

At the gate

Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,

On golden hinges turning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,

And where the way they cannot find, they force. Denham.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,

The gates are forc'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. The cardinal points of the world, East, West, North, and South.

If when the moon is in the hinge at East,

The birth breaks forward from its native rest;

Full eighty years, if you two years abate,

This station gives.

Creech's Manilius.

And these being hinges of the world, create

New powers in stars.

Creech's Manilius.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges; and 'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Tillotson, Sermon 4.

TO HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as an hinge.

Be thou a flatt'rer now, and hinge thy knee;

And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,

Blow off thy cap.

Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

TO HINT. v. a. [enter, French, Skinner.] To bring to mind by a slight-mention or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,

Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike.

Pope.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,

To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul. Thomson.

TO HINT. at. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Addison on the Georgicks.

HINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart.

South's Sermons.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

On this hint I spake,

She lov'd me for the dangers I had past. Shakesp. Othello.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison's Spectator.

HIP. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh; the fleshy part of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

So shepherds use

To set the same mark on the hip

Both of their sound and rotten sheep. Hudibras, p. ii.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,

And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

2. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or baunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,

I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip. Shakesp. Othello.

HIP. n. f. [from heopa, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogrose.

Eating hips and drinking watry foam. Hubberd's Tale.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shakespeare.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold

Winters. Bacon's Natural History.

To HIP. v. a. [from hip.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd, with an old motly saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poets cares;

One foot the sock, t'other the buskin wears:

Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't,

Like Volscius hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin eho, heus! Ainsworth.

HIP. } adj. A corruption of hypochondriack. Ainsworth.

HIPPISH. }

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. f. [ἵπποκένταυρος; hippocentaure, French.]

A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimeras to be imaged, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

HIPPOCRASS. n. f. [hypocras, French; quasi vinum Hippocratis.]

A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocrass, the wine,

Wassail the bowl with ancient ribbands fine. King.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,

Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryd. Æn.

4. To engage himself for pay.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased. 1 Sa. ii. 5.

HIRE. n. f. [hýne, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.

2. Wages paid for service.

Great thanks and goodly meed to that good fire;

He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Fairy Queen.

I have five hundred crowns,

The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father. Shakespeare.

Though little was their hire, and light their gain,

Yet somewhat to their share he threw. Dryden.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden.

HIRELING. n. f. [from hire.]

1. One who serves for wages.

The hireling longs to see the shades ascend,

That with the tedious day his toil might end,

And he his pay receive. Sandys.

In the framing of Hiero's ship there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other hirelings for carriages. Wilkins's Dædalus.

'Tis frequent here to see a freeborn son

On the left hand of a rich hireling run. Dryd. Juvenal.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now the shades thy evening walk with bays,

No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.

HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew

Of hireling mourners for his funeral due. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

HIRER. n. f. [from hire.]

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

HIRSU'TE. adj. [hirsutus, Latin.] Rough; rugged.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirsute roots: the hirsute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon's Natural History.

HIS. pronoun possessive. [hýr, Saxon.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes as fierce

As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shakesp. Henry V.

If much you note him,

You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shak. Macb.

Heav'n and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,

And all the better is it for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death;

But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shak. Ro. and Jul.

If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shakesp.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.

Whene'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;

And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addis. Ovid.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Not the dreadful spout,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakespeare.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age

Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.

By thy fond comfort, by thy father's cares,

By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope's Odyssey.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands,

Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. Anciently before self.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To HISS. v. n. [bissen, Dutch.] To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing hot. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 36.

See the furies arise:

See the snakes that they rear,

How they hiss in their hair. Dryden's Alexander's Feast.

Against the steed he threw

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,

Pierc'd through the yielding planks.

Dryden.

To Hiss. v. a. [hiss, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace. Encluf. xxii. 1.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;

Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. Morre.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I

Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

What's the newest grief?

—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,

Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hiss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,

A dismal universal hiss, the sound

Of publick scorn! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope's Dunciad.

HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: probably it may be a corruption of hush, hush it, hush, hiss.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Hiss! Romeo, hiss! O for a falconer's voice,

To lure this fabled gentle back again. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.

Mute silence hiss along!

'Less Philomel will deign a song,

In her sweetest saddest plight,

Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.

Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence

Equal, have I to render thee, divine

Historian! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison's Freeholder.

Not added years on years my task could close,

The long historian of my country's woes. Pope's Odyssey.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr. historicus, Latin.]

HISTORICK. }

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;

There warriors frowning in historick bras. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

With equal justice and historick care,

Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker, b. v.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney, b. i.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [ιστορια and γραφω; historiographie, Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these knights several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of these persons who have been famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 35.

I put the journals of all transactions into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [ιστορια and γραφω.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORY. n. f. [ιστορια; historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays;

It is to history he trusts for praise. Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room. Wiseman's Surgery.

What histories of toil could I declare?

But still long-weary'd nature wants repair. Pope's Odyssey.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the Bible, is necessary to divines. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

HISTORY PIECE. n. f. A picture representing some memorable event.

The former makes his works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.

HISTRIONICK. } Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

HISTRIONICALLY. adv. [from histrionical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Minshew, from bitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing bits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney, b. i.

His conscience shall bit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South's Sermons.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney, b. ii.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South's Sermons.

3. To attain; to reach the point.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so bit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Search every comment that your care can find,

Some here, some there, may bit the poet's mind. Roscomm.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to bit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in bitting features. Atterbury.

4. To strike a ruling passion.

Hail, divinest melancholy!

Whose faintly visage is too bright

To bit the sense of human fight. Milton.

There you bit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

5. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

6. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of these ancient poets still ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes. Spenser's Pastorals.

To HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Locke.

The bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with these metallick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and bitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there

Where most it promises; and oft it bits

Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits. Shakespeare.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon, Essay 53.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it bits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History.

But

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras, p. i.
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible; for friars have free admittance into every house. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.
You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing before that time: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson's Sermons.
There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estr.
None of them hit upon the art. Addison's Guardian.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakesp. Hamlet.
So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,
And at each hit with wonder seem'd amaz'd. Dryd. Juven.

2. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shak.
To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Glanville.
If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South's Sermons.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras, p. i.
The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estr.
These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

To HITCH. v. n. [biegan, Saxon, or hocher, French. Skinner.]
To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope's Horace.

To HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE. n. f. [hýðe, Saxon.] A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER. adv. [hýðen, Saxon.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion, hither came. Fairy Queen.
Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakesp.

Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Parad. Reg.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument:
[huc, Latin. Huc refer exitum.]

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of fairs in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HITHER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.
After these,

But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighb'ring hills descended. Milton's P. Lost.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end thereof, namely, that extreme wherein it is finite.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

HITHERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is eternal cannot be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost and concluding extreme. Hale.

HITHERTO. adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet; in any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestries
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Fairy Queen.
Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milton's Agonist.
Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,

And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden's Fables.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: they have also their design ever opposite to that of heaven, and this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryden's Juven. Dedication.

We ought to struggle with those natural disadvantages, and be careful whom we employ, whenever we design to correct them, which is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HITHERWARD. } adv. [hýðenpeano, Saxon.] This way;
HITHERWARDS. } towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation. Shakesp. Henry IV.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallow-glasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton's Agonistes.

HIVE. n. f. [hýfe, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or cell of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakesp. H. VI.
So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller.

Bees, of which we are told so many wonderful things, have each of them a hole in their hives: their honey is their own;
and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison's Guardian.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shak. H. VI.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

When they are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest,
hive them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To contain in hives.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Cleaveland.

To HIVE. v. n. To take shelter together.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

In Summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope's Letters.

HIVER. n. f. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hiver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HO. } interj. [eho! Latin.] A call; a sudden exclamation to HOA. } give notice of approach, or any thing else.

What noise there, ho? Shakespeare.
Here dwells my father Jew: hoa, who's within? Shakesp.

Stand, ho! speak the word along. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
When I cried hoa!

Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,
Your will. Shakespeare.

Ho, ho, come forth and flee. Zech. ii. 6.

Ho, swain, what shepherd owns these ragged sheep? Dry.

HOAR. adj. [hær, Saxon.]

1. White.

A people,
Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forrests hore. Fairfax.

Island

Island of bliss, all assaults
 Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea-wave. Thomson.
 2. Grey with age.
 It govern'd was and guided evermore
 Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Pai. Queen.
 Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;
 Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along. Pope.
 3. White with frost.
 HOAR-FROST. n. f. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.
 When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar- frost on the ground. Ex. xvi. 14.
 In Fahrenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is known by hoar-frosts.
Arbutnot on Air.
 HOARD. n. f. [hopd, Saxon.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.
 I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
 The squirrel's board, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shak.
 They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this board, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodw. Nat. History.
 TO HOARD. v. n. To make hoards; to lay up store.
 He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
 Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed. Fa. Queen.
 Happy always was it for that son,
 Whose father for his boarding went to hell? Shak. Hen. VI.
 TO HOARD. v. a. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.
 The boarded plague of the gods requite your love? Shak.
 I have just occasion to complain of them, who, because they understand Chaucer, would board him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryd. Fab. Preface.
 You board not health for your own private use,
 But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden's Fables.
 The base wretch, who boards up all he can,
 Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden's Juven.
 You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he boards it. Arbutnot's Art of political Lying.
 A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is boarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers, Sermon 2.
 HOARDER. n. f. [from hoard.] One that stores up in secret.
 Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.
 HO'ARHOUND. n. f. [marrubium, Latin.] A plant.
 It is a verticillate plant with a lip flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is upright, with two horns; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts: the pointal is fixed to the hinder part of the flower, and attended by four embryos, which become so many oblong seeds, inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.
Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, and in all diseases of the breast and lungs, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill's Mat. Med.

- Ye Latian dames, if any here
Hold your unhappy queen Amata dear!
The orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden's Æn.
5. To have any station.
The star bids the shepherd fold;
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.
And now the strand, and now the plain they held;
Their ardent eyes with bloody streaks were fill'd. Dryden.
Observe the youth who first appears in fight,
And holds the nearest station to the light. Dryden's Æn.
How pleasant and joyful a thing is it to have a light held us forth from heaven to guide our steps. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
6. To possess; to enjoy.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The castle, holden by a garrison of Germans, he commanded to be besieged. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Assuredly it is more shame for a man to lose that which he holdeth, than to fail in getting that which he never had. Hayw.
7. To possess in subordination.
The duke was willing to yield himself unto Solyman as his vassal, and of him to hold his seignior for a yearly tribute.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
8. To suspend; to refrain.
Death! what do'st? O hold thy blow!
What thou do'st, thou do'st not know. Crasshaw.
9. To stop; to refrain.
We cannot hold mortality's strong hand. Shak. K. John.
Fell, banning hag! inchantress, hold thy tongue. Shakesp.
Men in the midst of their own blood, and so furiously assailed, held their hands, contrary to the laws of nature and necessity. Bacon's War with Spain.
When straight the people, by no force compell'd,
Nor longer from their inclination held,
Break forth at once. Waller.
Unless thou find occasion, hold thy tongue;
Thyself or others, careless talk may wrong. Denham.
Hold your laughter, and then divert your fellow-servants.
Swift's Directions to the Footman.
10. To fix to any condition.
His gracious promise you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to. Shak. Coriol.
11. To preserve; to keep.
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
12. To confine to a certain state.
The most High then shewed signs for then, and held still the flood, 'till they were passed over. 2 Esdr. xiii. 14.
13. To detain.
Him God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. Acts.
14. To retain; to continue.
These reasons mov'd her star-like husband's heart;
But still he held his purpose to depart. Dryden.
15. To solemnize; to celebrate.
The queen this day here holds her parliament,
But little thinks we shall be of her council. Shakesp. H. VI.
He held a feast in his house, like the feast of a king. 1 Sa.
16. To offer; to propose.
Christianity came into the world with the greatest simplicity of thought and language, as well as life and manners, holding forth nothing but piety, charity, and humility, with the belief of the Messiah and of his kingdom. Temple.
My account is so far from interfering with Moses, that it holds forth a natural and unforced interpretation of his sense.
Woodward's Natural History.
17. To conserve; not to violate.
Her husband heard it, and held his peace. Numb. xxx. 7.
She said, and held her peace: Æneas went,
Unknowing whom the sacred sibyl meant. Dryden's Æn.
18. To manage; to handle intellectually.
Some in their discourse desire rather commendation of wit, in being able to hold all arguments, than of judgment in discerning what is true. Bacon, Essay 33.
19. To maintain.
Whereupon they also made engines against their engines, and held them battle a long season. 1 Mac. vi. 52.
20. To form; to plan.
The Pharisees went out, and held a counsel against him.
Mat. xii. 14.
21. To carry on; to continue.
He came to the land's end, where he holding his course, in a narrow passage towards the West, for the space of divers days, did at length peaceably pass through the straits. Abbot.
22. To hold forth. To offer to exhibit.
Observe the connection of these ideas in the propositions, which those books hold forth and pretend to teach as truths.
Locke.
23. To hold in. To restrain; to govern by the bridle.
I have lately fold my nag, and honestly told his greatest fault, which is, that he became such a lover of liberty that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.
24. To hold in. To restrain in general.
These mens hastiness the warier sort of you doth not commend;
ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not so dangerously flown abroad. Hooker, Preface.
25. To hold off. To keep at a distance.
Although 'tis fit that Cassio have his place;
Yet if you please to hold him off a while,
You shall by that perceive him. Shakespeare's Othello.
The object of sight doth strike upon the pupil of the eye directly, without any interception; whereas the cave of the ear doth hold off the sound a little from the organ. Bacon.
I am the better acquainted with you for absence, as men are with themselves for affliction: absence does but hold off a friend, to make one see him truly. Pope to Swift.
26. To hold on. To continue; to protract; to push forward.
They took Barbarossa, holding on his course to Africk, who brought great fear upon the country. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
If the obedience challenged were indeed due to these laws, then did our brethren both begin the quarrel and hold it on.
Sandersen's Judgment in one View.
27. To hold out. To extend; to stretch forth.
The king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. Esth. v. 2.
28. To hold out. To offer; to propose.
Fortune holds out these to you, as rewards. Ben. Johnson.
29. To hold out. To continue to do or suffer.
He cannot long hold out these pangs,
Th' incessant care and labour of his mind. Shakesp. H. IV.
30. To hold up. To raise aloft.
I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait? Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The hand of the Almighty visibly held up, and prepared to take vengeance. Locke.
31. To hold up. To sustain; to support.
There is no man at once either excellently good or extremely evil, but grows either as he holds himself up in virtue, or lets himself slide to viciousness. Sidney.
It followeth, that all which they do in this sort proceedeth originally from some such agent as knoweth, appointeth, holdeth up, and actually frameth the same. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
And so success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir shall hold his quarrel best, which Those princes have held up their sovereignty best, which have been sparing in those grants. Davies on Ireland.
We have often made one considerably thick piece of marble take and hold up another, having purposely caused their flat surfaces to be carefully ground and polished. Boyle.
Then do not strike him dead with a denial,
But hold him up in life, and cheer his soul
With the faint glimmering of a doubtful hope. Addis. Cato.
- To hold. v. n.
1. To stand; to be right; to be without exception.
To say that simply an argument, taken from man's authority, doth hold no way, neither affirmatively nor negatively, is hard.
Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
This holdeth not in the sea-coasts, because the vapour of the sea, without showers, doth refresh. Bacon's Natural History.
The lasting of plants is most in those that are largest of body; as oak, elm, and chestnut, and this holdeth in trees;
but in herbs it is often contrary. Bacon's Natural History.
When the religion formerly received is rent by discords, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect;
if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirit, to make himself author thereof; all which points held when Mahomet published his law. Bacon, Essay 59.
Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of these colours, shewing in what cases they hold, and in what they deceive. Bacon.
Where outward force constrains, the sentence holds;
But who constrains me? Milton.
So doth he deal with the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations:
they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillfleet.
The reasons given by them against the worship of images, will equally hold against the worship of images amongst Christians. Stillfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.
None of his solutions will hold by mere mechanicks. More.
This unseen agitation of the minute parts will hold in light and spirituous liquors. Boyle.
It holds in all operative principles whatsoever, but especially in such as relate to morality; in which not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South's Sermons.
The drift of this figure holds good in all the parts of the creation. L'Estrange.

- The proverb holds, that to be wise and love,
Is hardly granted to the gods above. Dryden's Fables.
As if th' experiment were made to hold
For base production, and reject the gold. Dryden.
This remark, I must acknowledge, is not so proper for the colouring as the design; but it will hold for both. Dryden.
Our author offers no reason; and when any body does, we shall see whether it will hold or no. Locke.
The rule holds in land as well as all other commodities. Loc.
This seems to hold in most cases. Addison's Spectator.
The analogy holds good, and precisely keeps to the same properties in the planets and comets. Cheyne.
Sanctorius's experiment of perspiration, being to the other secretion as five to three, does not hold in this country, except in the hottest time of Summer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold;
Alike fantastick, if too new or old. Pope on Criticism.
2. To continue unbroken or unsubdued.
Our force by land hath nobly held. Shakespeare.
3. To last; to endure.
We see, by the peeling of onions, what a holding substance the skin is. Bacon's Natural History.
Never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more might hold. Denham.
4. To continue.
He did not hold in this mind long. L'Estrange.
5. To refrain.
His dauntless heart would fain have held
From weeping, but his eyes rebell'd. Dryden.
6. To stand up for; to adhere.
Through envy of the devil came death into the world, and they that do hold of his side do find it. Wisd. ii. 24.
They must, if they hold to their principles, agree that things had their production always as now they have. Hale.
When Granada for your uncle held,
You was by us restor'd, and he expell'd. Dryden.
Numbers hold
With the fair freckled king and beard of gold:
So vig'rous are his eyes, such rays they cast,
So prominent his eagle's beak is plac'd. Dryden's Fables.
7. To be dependent on.
The other two were great princes, though holding of him;
men of giant-like both hugeness and force. Sidney, b. ii.
The mother, if the house holds of our lady, had rather, yea and will, have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
The great barons had not only great numbers of knights,
but even petty barons holding under them. Temple.
My crown is absolute, and holds of none. Dryden.
8. To derive right.
'Tis true, from force the noblest title springs;
I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.
9. To HOLD forth. To harangue; to speak in publick; to set forth publickly.
A petty conjurer, telling fortunes, held forth in the marketplace. L'Estrange's Fables.
10. To HOLD in. To restrain one's self.
I am full of the fury of the Lord: I am weary with holding in. Jer. vi. 11.
11. To HOLD in. To continue in luck.
A duke, playing at hazard, held in a great many hands together. Swift.
12. To HOLD off. To keep at a distance without closing with offers.
These are interests important enough, and yet we must be wooded to consider them; nay, that does not prevail neither, but with a perverse coyness we hold off. Decay of Piety.
13. To HOLD on. To continue; not to be interrupted.
The trade held on for many years after the bishops became Protestants; and some of their names are still remembered with infamy, on account of enriching their families by such sacrilegious alienations. Swift.
14. To HOLD on. To proceed.
He held on, however, 'till he was upon the very point of breaking. L'Estrange.
15. To HOLD out. To last; to endure.
Before those dews that form manna come upon trees in the valleys, they dissipate, and cannot hold out. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
As there are mountebanks for the natural body, so are there mountebanks for the politick body; men that perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds of science, and therefore cannot hold out. Bacon's Essays.
Truth, fidelity, and justice, are a sure way of thriving, and will hold out, when all fraudulent arts and devices will fail. Tillotson's Sermons.
By an extremely exact regimen a consumptive person may hold out for years, if the symptoms are not violent. Arbuthnot.
16. To HOLD out. Not to yield; not to be subdued.
The great master, leaving a sufficient number of soldiers for the keeping of that fort, went with the rest of his company

- to a place where the Spaniards, fore charged by Achimetes, had much ado to hold out. Knolles's History of the Turks.
You think it strange a person, obsequious to those he loves, should hold out so long against importunity. Boyle.
Nor could the hardest ir'n hold out
Against his blows. Hudibras.
I would cry now, my eyes grow womanish;
But yet my heart holds out. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
The citadel of Milan has held out formerly, after the conquest of the rest of the dutchy. Addison on Italy.
As to the holding out against so many alterations of state,
it sometimes proceeds from principles. Collier on Pride.
Pronounce your thoughts: are they still fixt
To hold it out, and fight it to the last?
Or are your hearts subdu'd at length, and wrought
By time and ill success to a submission? Addison's Cato.
17. To HOLD together. To be joined.
Those old Gothick castles, made at several times, hold to- gether only, as it were, by rags and patches. Dryd. Dufresnoy.
18. To HOLD together. To remain in union.
Even outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world besides, must keep faith amongst themselves, or else they cannot hold together. Locke.
19. To HOLD up. To support himself.
All the wise sayings and advices which philosophers could muster up to this purpose, have helped only to support some few stout and obstinate minds, which, without the assistance of philosophy, could have held up pretty well of themselves.
Tillotson, Sermon 5.
20. To HOLD up. Not to be foul weather.
Though nice and dark the point appear,
Quoth Ralph, it may hold up and clear. Hudibras, p. ii.
21. To HOLD up. To continue the same speed.
When two start into the world together, the success of the first seems to press upon the reputation of the latter; for why could not he hold up? Collier of Envy.
HOLD has the appearance of an interjection; but is the imperative mood. Forbear; stop; be still.
Hold, ho! lieutenant—sir—Montano! Gentlemen,
Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
The general speaks to you—hold, hold, for shame! Shakesp.
Hold, hold! are all thy empty wishes such!
A good old woman would have said as much. Dryden's Pers.
HOLD. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of seizing; gripe; grasp; seizure.
Those bards, Cæsar writeth, delivered no certain truth of any thing; neither is there any certain hold to be taken of any antiquity which is received by tradition. Spenser on Ireland.
The wits of the multitude are such, that many things they cannot lay hold on at once. Hooker, Dedication.
Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen shook it. 2 Sa. vi. 6.
This is to give him liberty and power:
Rather thou should'st lay hold upon him, send him
To deserv'd death, and a just punishment. Ben. Jonns. Catil.
Let but them
Find courage to lay hold on this occasion. Milt. Agonistes.
The devil himself, when let loose upon Job, could not transport that patient good man beyond his temper, or make him quit his hold. L'Estrange.
He seiz'd the shining bough with griping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's Æn.
The head is divided into four fingers bending forwards, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united, whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray on the Creation.
Yet then, from all my grief, O Lord,
Thy mercy set me free,
Whilst, in the confidence of pray'r,
My soul took hold on thee. Addison's Spectator.
We are strangely backward to lay hold of this safe, this only method of cure. Atterbury's Sermons.
He kept his hold,
Nor lost 'till beauty was decay'd and old,
And love was by possession pall'd and cold. Granville.
2. Something to be held; support.
If a man be upon an high place, without rails or good hold,
he is ready to fall. Bacon's Natural History.
3. Catch; power of seizing or keeping.
The law hath yet another hold on you. Shakespeare.
Let it consist with such a man's interest and safety to wrong you, and then it will be impossible you can have any hold upon him, because there is nothing left to give him a check, or to put in the balance against his profit. Swift.
4. Prison; place of custody.
They lay him in hold, because it was not declared what was to be done with him.
The prisoner to his hold-retir'd,
His troop with equal emulation fir'd, Dryden.
4. Power;

5. Power; influence.

Rural recreations abroad, and books at home, are the innocent pleasures of a man who is early wise; and gives fortune no more bold of him than of necessity he must. Dryden.

Fear is that passion which hath the greatest power over us, and by which God and his laws take the surest bold of us. Till.

6. Custody.

King Richard, he is in the mighty bold

Of Bolinbroke.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

7. Hold of a Ship. All that part which lies between the keelson and the lower deck.

Harris.

Now a sea into the bold was got,

Wave upon wave another sea had wrought. Dryden's Juv.

8. A lurking place: as, the bold of a wild beast or deer.

9. A fortified place; a fort.

It was his policy to leave no bold behind him; but make all plain and waste. Spenser.

Ho'lder. n. f. [from bold.]

1. One that holds or gripes any thing in his hand.

The makers and holders of plows are wedded to their own particular way. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A tenant; one that holds land under another.

In times past not holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could not get one to be his tenant. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Holderforth. n. f. [bold and forth.] An haranguer; one who speaks in publick.

Whence some tub holdersforth have made

In powd'ring tubs the richest trade. Hudibras, p. iii.

As his strong sides can volly. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Hole. n. f. [hol, Dutch; pole, Saxon.]

1. A cavity narrow and long, either perpendicular or horizontal.

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. Shakespeare.

Tickling is most in the soles, and under the arm holes and sides. Bacon.

A loadstone is so disposed, that it shall draw unto it, on a reclined plane, a bullet of steel, which, as it ascends near to the loadstone, may fall down through some hole, and so return to the place whence it began to move. Wilkins's Dædalus.

There are the tops of the mountains, and under their roots in holes and caverns the air is often detained. Burnet.

2. A perforation; a small interstitial vacuity.

Look upon linen that has small holes in it: those holes appear very black, and men are often deceived in taking holes for spots of ink; and painters, to represent holes, make use of black. Boyle on Colours.

3. A cave; a hollow place.

Upon his bloody finger he doth wear

A precious ring, that lightens all the hole. Shakespeare.

4. A cell of an animal.

A tortoise spends all his days in a hole, with a house upon his head. L'Estrange.

I have frighted ants with my fingers, and pursued them as far as another hole, stopping all passages to their own nest, and it was natural for them to fly into the next hole. Addison.

5. A mean habitation. Hole is generally used, unless in speaking of manual works, with some degree of dislike.

When Alexander first beheld the face

Of the great cynick, thus he did lament:

How much more happy thou, that art content

To live within this little hole, than I

Who after empire, that vain quarry, fly. Dryden's Juv.

6. Some subterfuge or shift.

Ho'lidam. n. f. [holy dame.] Blessed lady. Hanmer.

By my holidam, here comes Catharine. Shakespeare.

Ho'lily. adv. [from holy.]

To Ho'llow. v. a. [from the noun.] To make hollow; to excavate.

Trees, rudely hollow'd, did the waves sustain,

'Ere ships in triumph plow'd the watry plain. Dryden. Ovid.

Multitudes were employed in the sinking of wells, the digging of trenches, and the hollowing of trees. Spektor.

To Ho'llow. v. n. [This is written by neglect of etymology for holla. See Holla.] To shout; to hoot.

This

This unseen judge will wait, and in your ear
Will hollow rebel, tyrant, murderer. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
I pass for a disaffected person and a murderer, for no other reason but because I do not hoot and hollow, and make a noise.
Addison's Spectator.

He with his hounds comes hollowing from the stable,
Makes love with nods, and kneels beneath a table. Pope.

HO'LOWLY. adv. [from hollow.]

1. With cavities.

2. Unfaithfully; insincerely; dishonestly.

O earth, bear witness,

And crown what I profess with kind event;

If I speak true; if hollowly, invert

What best is boaded me, to mischief! Shakesp. Tempest.

You shall arraign your conscience,

And try your penitence, if it be found,

Or hollowly put on

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

HO'LOWNESS. n. f. [from hollow.]

1. Cavity; state of being hollow.

If you throw a stone or a dart, they give no sound; no more do bullets, except they happen to be a little hollowed in the casting, which hollowness penneth the air. Bacon's Natur. Hist.

I have seen earth taken up by a strong wind, so that there remained great empty hollowness in the place. Hakewill.

An heap of sand or fine powder will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;

Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sound

Reverbs no hollowness.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. South's Sermons.

HO'LOWROOT. n. f. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HO'LLY. n. f. [hōleyn, Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some variegated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Mill.

Fairest blossoms drop with every blast;

But the brown beauty will like holbies last. Gay.

Some to the holly hedge

Nestling repair, and to the thicket some;

Some to the rude protection of the thorn. Thomson's Spring.

HO'LLYHOCK. n. f. [hōlihoc, Saxon, commonly called holyoak.]

Rosemallow.

It is in every respect larger than the common mallow: its leaves are rougher, and its flowers, which are in some species double, adhere closely to the stalk. They flower in July. Mill.

Holyocks far exceed poppies for their durableness, and are very ornamental. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HO'LLYROSE. } n. f. Plants.

Ainsworth.

HO'LLYTREE. }

HOLME. n. f.

1. Holme or howme, whether jointly or singly, comes from the Saxon holme, a river island; or if the place be not such, the same word signifies also a hill, or mountain. Gibson's Camden.

2. The ilex; the evergreen oak.

Under what tree did'st thou take them companying together? who answered, under a holm tree. Suf. lvi.

The carver holme, the maple seldom inward found. Spens.

HO'LOCAUST. n. f. [ὅλως and καίω.] A burnt sacrifice; a sacrifice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and nothing retained by the offerer.

Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which being an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burthen for a boy. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice;
let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an oblation; let the hand do no unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust. Ray on the Creation.

Eumenes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice. Broome.

HO'LOGRAPH. n. f. [ὅλως and γράφω] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether by the granter's own hand.

His great love, sharp as his spur, hath holf him

To's home before us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HO'LPEN. The old participle passive of help.

In a long trunk the sound is holpen, though both the mouth and the ear be a handful from the trunk; and somewhat more holpen when the hearer is near, than when the speaker. Bacon.

HO'LPSTER. n. f. [hēolpster, Saxon, a hiding place.] A case for a horseman's pistol.

In's rusty holsters put what meat

Into his hose he cou'd not get.

Butler.

HOLT, whether at the beginning or ending of the name of any place, signifies that it is or hath been woody, from the Saxon holt, a wood; or sometimes possibly from the Saxon hol, i. e. hollow, especially when the name ends in tun or dun. Gibson.

HOLY. adj. [hālig, Saxon; hēyligh, Dutch; from hal, healthy, or in a state of salvation.]

1. Good; pious; religious.

See where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

And see a book of prayer in his hand,

True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Doubtless

With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable,

And, doubling that, most holy. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. Hallowed; consecrated to divine use.

State, holy or unhallow'd, what of that? Shak. Hen. VI.

Bare was his hoary head; one holy hand

Held forth his laurel crown, and one his sceptre. Dryden.

3. Pure; immaculate.

Common sense could tell them, that the good God could not be pleased with any thing cruel; nor the most holy God with any thing filthy and unclean. South's Sermons.

4. Sacred.

An evil soul producing holy witness,

Is like a villain with a smiling cheek. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled

Like holy Phœbus' car. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

HO'LY-GHOST. n. f. [hālig and gast, Saxon.] The third person of the adorable Trinity.

If strength of persuasion be the light which must guide us,
I ask, how shall any one distinguish the inspirations of the Holy-ghost? Locke.

made their oaths of fidelity to the earl marshal. Davies.

2. Obeisance; respect paid by external action.

The gods great mother, when her heav'nly race

Do homage to her. Denham.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay

They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;

To this both knights and dames their homage made,

And due obeisance to the daisy paid. Dryden.

Go, go, with homage yon proud victors meet!

Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters feet. Dryden.

TO HOMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.

HO'MAGER. n. f. [hommager, Fr. from homage.] One who holds by homage of some superior lord.

As I'm Egypt's queen,

Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine

Is Cæsar's homager. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

His subjects, traytors, are received by the duke of Bretagne his homager. Bacon's Henry VII.

HOME. n. f. [hām, Saxon.]

1. His own house; the private dwelling.

I'm now from home, and out of that provision

Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Shakespeare.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,

Secur'd from all approaches but a wife. Dryden.

When Hector went to see

His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,

He found her not at home; for she was gone. Dryden.

Those who have homes, when home they do repair,

To a last lodging calls their wand'ring friends. Dryden.

2. His own country.

How can tyrants safely govern home,

Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? Shakesp. H. VI.

Their determination is to return to their homes, and to trouble you no more. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

With honour to his home let Theseus ride,
With love to friend. Dryden's Fables.

At home the hateful names of parties cease,
And factious souls are weary'd into peace. Dryden.

They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. The place of constant residence.

Flandria, by plenty made the home of war,
Shall weep her crime, and bow to Charles restor'd. Prior.

4. United to a substantive, it signifies domestick.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

HOME. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To one's own habitation.

One of Adam's children in the mountains lights on a glittering substance; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.

2. To one's own country.

3. Close to one's own breast or affairs.

He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself. L'Estrange.

This is a consideration that comes home to our interest. Add.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, I am sure, madam, you will, by particular application, bring home to your own concern. Wake's Preparation for Death.

4. To the point designed; to the utmost; closely; fully.

Crafty enough either to hide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home. Sidney, b. ii.

In fell motion,

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A loyal fir

To him thou follow'st: I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Her cause and yours

I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo

Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderson.

Break through the thick array

Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addis.

He makes choice of some piece of morality; and in order to press this home, he makes less use of the force of reasoning.

Pope's View of Epick Poems.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury's Sermon, Preface.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.

Poison may be false;

The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.

I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

HOMEBO'RN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native; natural.

Though to be thus elemented, arm

These creatures from homeborn intrinsic harm. Donne.

2. Domestick; not foreign.

Num'rous bands

With homeborn lyes, or tales from foreign lands. Pope.

HO'MEBRED. adj. [home and bred.]

1. Native; natural.

God hath taken care to anticipate every man, to draw him early into his church, before other competitors, homebred lusts, or vicious customs of the world, should be able to pretend to him. Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Not polished by travel; plain; rude; artless; uncultivated.

Only to me two homebred youths belong. Dryden's Juven.

3. Domestick; not foreign.

But if of danger, which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tidings tell. Fairy Queen, cant. i.

This once happy land,

By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Phillips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,

And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;

But such a sacred and homefelt delight,

Such sober certainty of waking bliss,

I never heard 'till now. Milton.

Happy next him who to these shades retires,

Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,

Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,

Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.

HO'MELILY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.

HO'MELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness;
coarseness.

Homer has opened a great field of raillery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison's Spectator.

HO'MELY. adj. [from home.] Plain; homespun; not elegant;
not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise

A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;

Whereto approached not in any wise

The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown. Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,

So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift:

Riddling confession finds but riddling thrift. Shakespeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.

Our stomachs will make what's homely savoury. Shakespeare.

It is for homely features to keep home;

They had their name thence. Milton.

It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South's Sermons.

Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band

Invade their trenchers next. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

Now Strephon daily entertains

His Chloe in the homely strains. Swift.

Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clar.

HO'MELY. adv. Plainly; coarsely; rudely.

Thus like the god his father, homely dress,

He strides into the hall a horrid guest. Dryden's Æn.

HO'MELYN. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HOMEMADE. adj. [home and made.] Made at home; not manufactured in foreign parts.

A tax laid on your native product, and homemade commodities, makes them yield less to the first seller. Locke.

HO'MER. n. f. A measure of about three pints.

An homer of barley-feed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. Lev. xxvii. 16.

HO'MESPUN. adj. [home and spun.]

1. Spun or wrought at home; not made by regular manufacturers.

Instead of homespun coifs were seen

Good pinners, edg'd with colberteen. Swift.

2. Not made in foreign countries.

He appeared in a suit of English broad-cloth, very plain, but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, home-
spun ware. Addison.

3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; inelegant.

They sometimes put on, when they go ashore, long sleeveless coats of homespun cotton. Sandys's Travels.

We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone; pleased the emperor, by giving him the resemblance of his ancestors, and gave him such a resemblance as was not scandalous in that age. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

Our homespun authors must forsake the field,

And Shakespeare to the soft Scarlatti yield. Addison.

HOMESPU'N. n. f. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustick man.

What hempen homespuns have we swaggering here,

So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakespeare.

HO'MESTALL. n. f. [ham and stæle, Saxon.] The place of HO'MESTEAD. } the house.

Both house and homestead into seas are born,

And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.

HO'MEWARD. } adv. [ham and weard, Saxon.] Towards

HO'MEWARDS. } home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,

Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs

Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Since such love's natural station is, may still

My love descend, and journey down the hill,

Not panting after growing beauties; so

I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;

And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth! Milton.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,

Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,

Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,

They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden's Æn.

What now remains,

But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,

And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence. Dryden.

HO'MICIDE. n. f. [homicide, French; homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.

2. Destruction.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!

The homicide of names is less than lives.

Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicide, Lat.] A murderer; a manslayer.

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,

To undertake the death of all the world,

So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.

—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakesp.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield

His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.

HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,

With homicidal rage, the king oppres.

Pope's Odyssey.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [ὁμιλητικός.] Social; conversible.

His life was holy, and, when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster.

Atterbury.

HOMILY. n. f. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.] A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGENEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. ὁμογενής.] Having HOMOGENEOUS. } the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest.

Woodward's Natural History.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

Newton's Opt.

HOMOGENEALNESS. } n. f. [from homogeneous, or homogeneous.]
HOMOGENEITY. } Participation of the same principles or HOMOGENEOUSNESS. } nature; similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the discerned liquors.

Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

HOMOGENY. n. f. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny.

Bacon.

HOMOLOGOUS. adj. [homologue, Fr. ὁμόλογος.] Having the same manner or proportions.

HOMONYMOUS. adj. [homonyme, Fr. ὁμώνυμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation.

Watts's Logick.

HOMONYMY. n. f. [homonymie, French; ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

HOMOTONOUS. adj. [ὁμοτόνος.] Equable: said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension.

Quincy.

HONE. n. f. [This word M. Casaubon derives from ἀκονή; Junius from hogsaen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from pæn, Saxon, a stone; pænan, to stone] A whetstone for a razor.

A hone and a parer, to pare away grafs. Tusser's Husband.

TO HONE. v. n. [honzian, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

HONEST. adj. [honeste, French; honestus, Latin.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Sh.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things.

Watts's Logick.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

4. It is sometimes used criminally for dishonest; base.

I'll devise some honest slanders

To stain my cousin with: one doth not know

How much an ill word doth impositon liking. Shakespeare.

HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. Ben. John's Catil.
For some time past all endeavours or proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face.

Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HONESTY. n. f. [honesteté, French; honestas, Latin.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Shakesp.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem.

Temple.

HONIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh;

That at her flow'ry work doth sing.

Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in mens ears;

To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakesp. Henry V.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear

The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

Draws hitherward.

Milton's Agonistes.

HONEY. n. f. [huni, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. We have three kinds of honey: the first and finest is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining from the combs without pressing. The second is thicker than the first, often almost solid, procured from the combs by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, swallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into some of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and deposited again into the cells of the comb, is destined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vastly preferable to that taken from the same hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretick.

Hill's Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakesp. Hen. V.

The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and first fostering: some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees.

Raleigh's History of the World.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours.

Bacon's Natural History.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot.

L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sope, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire.

Arbutnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;

Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars

The honey of his language.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,

Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Shakespeare.

3. A name of tenderness; sweet; sweetness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;

I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote

In mine own comfort.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee: didst not thou say, thou long'dst for a Christian slave?

Dryden.

TO HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,

Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love

Over the nasty sty.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HO'NEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against Winter. Grew's Musaeum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,

Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer's Husbandry.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,

And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub: the leaves are like those of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into several parts: the flower consists of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, sometimes in the shape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, resembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundish seeds. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HO'NEY-GNAT. n. f. [melio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HO'NEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress 'till the honey-moon is over. Addis.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melloil beat, and honey-suckles pound;

With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryd. Virgil.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,

And leave them honeyless. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the most part, beset with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, consisting of one leaf, in shape like those of comfrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the second page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with these little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addis. Guard.

HONOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon's Essays.

3. The title of a man of rank.

Return unto thy lord,

Bid him not fear the separated councils:

His honour and myself are at the one;

And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakesp. R. III.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,

Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours

Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakesp.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,

His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shak.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Reverence; due veneration.

They take thee for their mother,

And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

There, my lord,

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,

Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.

—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers's Sermons.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flav'd,

I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;

If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shak. Winter's Tale.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not prevent itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,

Godlike erect! with native honour clad,

In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton's Parad. Lost.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,

Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves.

Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury's Sermons.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Preparation for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying

My father's loss, like a most royal prince,

Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,

Made my name once more noble. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,

To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope's Horace.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,

And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shakesp.

TO HONOUR. v. a. [honnorer, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esth. xvi. 11.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus. x. 30.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? Ecclus. x. 31.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,

Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakesp.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Sir, I'll tell you,

Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him

That I think honourable. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? If. xxiii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman

Still to remember wrongs. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Conferring honour.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,

And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden's Æn.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fa. Qu.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shak.

6. Without taint; without reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. 1 Mac. xiv. 5.

Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakespeare's Henry V.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,

- Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakespeare.

8. Equitable.

HO'NOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

HO'NOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,

With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Sh. H. VIII.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks distance of time, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and presently after condemned. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:

Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden's Juvenal.

HO'NOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not here omit to do justice to Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is used after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hob, Saxon, probably from perob, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd;
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden's Fables.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

Undertaking so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was to ride in cold weather, that none should discern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated or joined to it. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, amen. Shakespeare.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

HO'ODMAN'S BLIND. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shak. Haml.

To HO'OD-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

You may

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink. Shakesp.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post. Ben. Johnson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that are apt to start.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks mens minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Rowe.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,
The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all mens ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-winked with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [hoef, Saxon; hoef, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Exek. xxvi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. More's Antidote against Atheism.

HO'OFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. ii. c. 8.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the forefeet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, insomuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOK. n. f. [poce, Saxon; hoock, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Knolles.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hook,

That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce

Their slimy jaws. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,

They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man

Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,

Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick. Morimer's Husbandry.

5. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,

With hooks and ladles, as need did require;

The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,

Like flashing Bentley with his desperate hook. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,

Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks. Cleveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estr.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,

And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. Hook. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running. Ainsl.

9. Hook or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique.

Which he by hook or crook had gather'd,

And for his own inventions father'd. Hudibras, p. iii.

He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryd.

To Hook. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish: upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison's Spectator.

2. To intrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she

I can hook to me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with an hook.

5. To be drawn by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HO'OKED.

H O O

HOOKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree,

To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:

Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,

Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryden.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the back-sides of leaves. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

HOOKEDNESS. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome there, Cæsar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

HOOP. n. f. [hoep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,

A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,

That the united vessel of their blood

Shall never leak. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

If I knew

What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world I would pursue it. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,

What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryd. Juven.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,

Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

3. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

A petticoat without a hoop.

Swift.

At coming in you saw her stoop;

The entry brush'd against her hoop. Swift.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at distance. Clarissa.

2. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison on Italy.

TO HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

The cask for his majesty's shipping were hooped as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron. Raleigh's Essays.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou

Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,

I will devise a death.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

I hoop the firmament, and make

This my embrace the zodiack.

Cleaveland.

That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew's Mus.

TO HOOP. v. n. [from wopgan or wopyan, Gothick; or hupper, French, derived from the Gothick. This word is generally written whoop, which is more proper, if we deduce it from the Gothick; and hoop, if we derive it from the French.]

To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

TO HOOP. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles

Suffer'd me, by th' voice of slaves, to be

Hoop'd out of Rome.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOPER. n. f. [from hoop, to inclose with hoops.] A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

HOOPING-COUGH. n. f. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chine cough.

TO HOOT. v. n. [hwot, Welsh; huer, French.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollowed and hooted after me as at the arrantest coward. Sidney.

Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more. Dryd. Juv.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back

The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders

At our quaint sports. Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

TO HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,

Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' th' city. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god

That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird, from muting on my head. Ben. Johnson.

Patridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

H O P

HOOT. n. f. [huée, French, from the verb.] Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glanville's Sceps.

TO HOP. v. n. [hoppan, Saxon; hoppem, Dutch.]

1. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,

And yet no further than a wanton's bird,

That lets it hop a little from her hand,

And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shakespeare.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;

For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shakespeare.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shakespeare.

The painted birds, companions of the Spring,

Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.

Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;

But hopp'd about, and short excursions made

From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold. Collier on Duelling.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

2. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,

And hopping here and there, himself a jest,

Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.

Softly feel

Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop

Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A jump; a light leap.

2. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison's Guardian.

3. A place where meaner people dance. Ainsworth.

HOP. n. f. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Latin.] A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each of the leafy scales is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,

For hop poles and crotches in lopping go save. Tuss. Husb.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon's Natural History.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham's Physico-Theology.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer's Husband.

When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer's Husbandry.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer's Husband.

TO HOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate with hops.

Brew in March or October, and hop it for long keeping.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

To increase the milk, diminished by flesh-meat, take malt-drink not much hopped. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HOPE. n. f. [hopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job xiv. 7.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.

When in heav'n she shall his essence see,

This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;

Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;

Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee

We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou

Our absent presence, and our future now. Crashaw.

Faith

H O P

Faith is oppos'd to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.
 He fought them both, but wish'd his hap might find Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
 Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,
 Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 The Trojan dames
 To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
 In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden's Virg. Æn.
 Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't? L'Estrange.
 To encourage our hopes it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.
 The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for fight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.
 Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.
 2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any body.
 It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Mac. vii. 14.
 Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord.
Ecclus. xiv. 2.
 I had hope of France,
 Ev'n as I have of fertile England's foil. Shakesp. Henry VI.
 3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.
 I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 4. The object of hope.
 Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
 And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
 To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakesp. Henry VI.
 She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
 Most in his thought, and ever in his fight. Dryden.
 HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ainsworth.
 To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To live in expectation of some good.
Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
 My muse, by storms long tost,
 Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
 And finds more favour by her ill success,
 Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.
 Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
 Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.
 2. To place confidence in futurity.
 He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Pf. xxxi. 24.
 To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.
 The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
 Cold-biting Winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shak. Hen. VI.
 So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
 Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden's Fables.
 HOPEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]
 1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.
 He will advance thee:
 I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.
 What to the old can greater pleasure be,
 Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.
 They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.
 2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.
 Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hooker, b. v.
 I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.
 Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
 Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
 Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
 If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope's Odyssey.
 HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]
 1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.
 He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls sons and heirs. Wott.
 They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hope- fully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.
 2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.
 From your promising and generous endeavours we may hope- fully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanv. Scops. Preface.

H O R

HOPEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.
 Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Watton.
 HOPELESS. adj. [from hope.]
 1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation.
 Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker, b. iv.
 Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shakespeare.
 He watches with greedy hope to find
 His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
 To other speedy aid might lend at need. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
 And hopeless to prevail by open force,
 Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
 In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryden's Fob.
 2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.
 The hopeless word of never to return,
 Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakesp. R. II.
 HOPE. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.
 I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary, will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift on the Sacramental Test.
 HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.
 One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hop- ingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.
 HOPPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ainsworth.
 HOPPERS. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.
 HOPPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremue.]
 1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.
 The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes:
 sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.
 Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
 Just at the hopper will I stand,
 In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
 And mark the clack how justly it will sound. Betterton.
 2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth.
 HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.
 Howe'er reduc'd and plain,
 The watch would still a watch remain;
 But if the horal orbit ceases,
 The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
 HO'RARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]
 1. Relating to an hour.
 I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
 What you perhaps forgot befell you,
 By way of horary inspection,
 Which some account our worst erection. Hindibras, p. ii.
 In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has largely discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers.
Tatler, No. 56.
 2. Continuing for an hour.
 When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people.
 Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
 Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
 And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomf. Winter.
 HORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.
 When the morning sun shall raise his car
 Above the border of this horizon,
 We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakesp.
 She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
 From skirt to skirt, a fiery region. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
 Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
 Invested with bright rays. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 4

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous fight. Dryden.
When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horreur that rises from such a prospect. Addison's Spectator.

HORIZO'NTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rows in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZO'NTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them
horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

HORN. n. f. [haur, Gothick; horn, Saxon; born, Dutch.]

1. The hard pointed bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon's N. Hist.

Zelus rises through the ground,

Pending the bull's tough neck with pain,

That tosses back his horns in vain. Addison on Italy.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good-news. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

The goddess to her crooked horn

Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,

With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.

She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,

That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon

Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,

Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare.

Aufidius,

Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,

Thrust forth his horns again into the world,

Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,

And durst not once peep out. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.

If I have horns to make one mad,

Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakespeare.

Merchants, vent'ring through the main,

Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras, p. ii.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

HORNEE'AK. } n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNFISH. }

HORNBEAM. n. f. [horn and boem, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree: the katkins are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, and the outward shell of the fruit is winged. This tree was formerly much used in hedges for wildernesses and orangeries.
The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HORNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.

Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid

A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;

And that the child may learn the better,

As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HO'RNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that, with the terrour of the shock,

Astonished both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen, b. i.

O, that I were

Upon the hill of Bafan, to out-roar

The horned herd. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Thither all the horned host resorts,

To graze the ranker mead. Denham.

I thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn

Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

HO'RNED. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.

HO'RNET. n. f. [hynnette, Saxon, from its horns] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suff'ring, is the best;

'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryden.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortim.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HO'RNFOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick man,

That did not inly quake!

With hornfoot horses, and brass wheels,

Jove's storms to emulate. Hakewill on Providence.

HO'RNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl. Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A county dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty tablere,

That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,

Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Kaleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine

Run t' the feet-veins, and refine

Your firckum jerkum to a dance

Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,

To wonder at the hornpipes here

Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Pen. Johnson.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 106.

HO'RNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone. Ainsworth.

HO'RNWORK. n. f. A kind of angular fortification.

HO'ARNY. adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.

He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,

And saw the ravens with their horny beaks

Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton's Pa. Lost.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical figure. Ray.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryd. Virg.

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison's Spectat.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

HORO'GRAPHY. n. f. [horographie, Fr. ωρα and γραφω.] An account of the hours.

HO'ROLOGE. } n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any instrument that

HO'ROLOGY. } tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep;

He'll watch the horologe a double set,

If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare's Othello.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HORO'METRY. n. f. [horometrie, French; ωρα and μετρίω.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HO'ROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; ωροσκόπος.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living natures. Bro.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,

His fire, the blear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,

From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryd. Juven.

Where

H O R

H O R

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech's Manil.
They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley's Sermons.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, French; horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon's Natural History.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South's Sermons.

HORRIBLENESS. n. f. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

HORRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]

1. Dreadfully; hideously.

What hideous noise was that!

Horribly loud.

2. To a dreadful degree.

Milton's Agonistes.

The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HORRID. adj. [horridus, Latin.]

1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.

Oh!

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,

That we the horrid may seem to those

Which chance to find us.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Not in the legions

Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,

In evils to top Macbeth.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Shocking; offensive; unpleasing: in womens cant.

Already I your tears survey,

Already hear the horrid things they say.

Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,

Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dry.

HORRIDNESS. n. f. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horror.

His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,

Here dwells the direful shark.

Thomson's Summer.

HORRISONOUS. adj. [horrisonus, Latin.] Sounding dreadfully. Dict.

HORROUR. n. f. [horror, Latin; horreur, French.]

1. Terrour mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,

Did always soar, beating his iron wings;

And after him owls and night ravens flew,

The hateful messengers of heavy things. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

I have sapt full with horrors;

Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,

Cannot once start me.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,

Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;

But if we think of being turn'd to nought,

A trembling horror in our souls we find.

Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd

At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.

Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;

Their pride is humbled, and their fear confess.

Dryden.

2. Gloom; dreariness.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,

Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;

Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,

And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Pope.

3. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking. Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [hors, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped; used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakesp. Macbeth.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shak. R. III.

I would sell my horse, and buy ten more

Better than he.

Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

Thy face, bright centaur, Autumn's heats retain,

The softer season suiting to the man;

Whilst Winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse

With frost, and makes him an uneasy course.

Creech.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

2. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shak. Macb.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon's War with Spain.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse. Clarendon, b. viii.

Th' Arcadian horse

With ill success engage the Latin force.

Dryden's Æn.

3. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linnen on.

4. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

5. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as, a horseface, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.

To HORSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as in good faith I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wish't none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney, b. ii.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonsalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Ermin, who never appears but after the storm. Bacon's Apophthegms.

2. To carry one on the back.

3. To ride any thing.

Stalls, bulks, windows

Are smother'd, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd

With variable complexions; all agreeing

In earnestness to see him.

Shakespeare.

4. To cover a mare.

If you let him out to horse more mares than your own, you must feed him well. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HORSEBACK. n. f. [horse and back.] The seat of the rider; the state of being on a horse.

I've seen the French,

And they can well on horseback.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I saw them salute on horseback,

Beheld them when they lighted. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He fought but one remarkable battle wherein there were any elephants, and that was with Porus, king of India; in which notwithstanding he was on horseback. Brown's Vul. Err.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,

Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryd. Juvenal.

If your ramble was on horseback, I am glad of it, on account of your health. Swift to Gay.

Under Sagittarius are born chariot-racers, horsebreakers, and tamers of wild beasts. Creech.

HORSECHESNUT. n. f. [horse and chesnut.] A plant.

It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike: the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the Summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots. Miller.

I may bring in the horsechesnut, which grows into a goodly standard. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HORSECOURSER. n. f. [horse and courser.] Junius derives it from horse and cofe, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoser. The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, feller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.

A servant to a horsecourser was thrown off his horse. Wisem.

A Florentine bought a horse for so many crowns, upon condition condition to pay half down: the horsecourser comes to him next morning for the remainder. L'Estrange.

HORSEACE. n. f. [horse and race.] A match of horses in running.
 In horseraces men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. Bacon's Natural History.

Trajan, in the fifth year of his tribuneship, entertained the people with a horserace. Addison on ancient Medals.
HO'RSERADISH. n. f. [horse and radish.] A root acrid and biting: a species of scurvygrafs.
Horseradish is increased by sprouts spreading from the old roots left in the ground, that are cut or broken off. Mortimer.
 Stomachicks are the cresse acrids, as horseradish and scurvygrafs, infused in wine. Floyer on the Humours.
HO'RSESHOE. n. f. [horse and shoe.]
 1. A plate of iron nailed to the feet of horses.
 I was thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot in that surge, like a horsehoe. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 2. An herb. Ainsworth.
HORSESTEALER. n. f. [horse and steal.] A thief who takes away horses.
 He is not a pickpurse, nor a horsestealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut. Shakesp. As you like it.
HO'RSETAIL. n. f. A plant.
HO'RSETONGUE. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
HO'RSEWAY. n. f. [horse and way.] A broad way by which horses may travel.

 Here's an English taylor come hither for stealing out of a French hose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 These men were bound in their coats, hosen, hats, and other garments, and cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace. Dan. iii. 21.
 He cros examin'd both our hose,
 And plunder'd all we had to lose. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
 2. Stockings; covering for the legs.
 He being in love, could not see to garter his hose;
 And you, being in love, cannot see to put on Your hose. Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
 Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
 And knit thee gloves? Gay's Pastorals.
HO'SIER. n. f. [from hose.] One who sells stockings.
 You are as arrant a cockney as any hosier in Cheapside. Swift to Gay.
HO'SPITABLE. adj. [hospitabilis, Latin.] Giving entertainment to strangers; kind to strangers.
 I'm your host:
 With robbers hands my hospitable favour
 You should not ruffle thus. Shakesp. King Lear.
 Receive the ship-wreck'd on your friendly shore;
 With hospitable rites relieve the poor. Dryden's Æn.
HO'SPITABLY. adv. [from hospitable.] With kindness to strangers.
 Ye thus hospitably live,
 And strangers with good cheer receive. Prior.
 The former liveth as piously and hospitably as the other. Swift.
HO'SPITAL. n. f. [hospital, French; hospitalis, Latin.]
 1. A place built for the reception of the sick, or support of the poor.
 They who were so careful to bestow them in a college when they were young, would be so good as to provide for them in some hospital when they are old. Wotton.
 I am about to build an hospital, which I will endow handsomely for twelve old husbandmen. Addison's Spectator.
 2. A place for shelter or entertainment.
 They spy'd a goodly castle, plac'd
 Foreby a river in a pleasant dale,
 Which chusing for that evening's hospital,
 They thither march'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
HOSPITALITY. n. f. [hospitalité, French.] The practice of entertaining strangers.

H O S

The Lacedemonians forbidding all access of strangers into their coasts, are, in that respect, deservedly blamed, as being enemies to that hospitality which, for common humanity sake, all the nations on earth should embrace. Hooker, b. i.

My master is of a churlish disposition,
And little reckes to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shakefp. As you like it.

How has this spirit of faction broke all the laws of charity, neighbourhood, alliance, and hospitality? Swift.

HOSPITALLER. n. f. [hospitallier, French; hospitalarius, low Latin, from hospital.] One residing in an hospital in order to receive the poor or stranger.

The first they reckon such as were granted to the hospitallers in titulum beneficii. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO HOSPITATE. v. a. [hospitor, Latin.] To reside under the roof of another.

That always chuses an empty shell, and this hospitates with the living animal in the same shell. Grew's Musæum.

HOST. n. f. [hôte, French; hospes, hospitius, Latin.]

1. One who gives entertainment to another.

Homer never entertained either guests or hosts with long speeches, 'till the mouth of hunger be stopped. Sidney.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host. Shakefp. King Lear.

2. The landlord of an inn.

Time's like a fashionable host,

That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the corner. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

The frighted friend arose by break of day,
And found the stall where late his fellow lay;
Then of his impious host enquiring more,
Was answer'd that his guest was gone before. Dryden.

3. [From hostis, Latin.] An army; numbers assembled for war.

Let ev'ry soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze your chariot-wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

After these came arm'd, with spear and shield,
An host so great as cover'd all the field. Dryden.

4. Any great number.

Give to a gracious message

An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

5. [Hostia, Latin; hostie, French.] The sacrifice of the mass in the Romish church; the consecrated wafer.

TO HOST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To take up entertainment.

Go, bear it to the centaur, where we host;
And stay there, Dromio, 'till I come to thee. Shakespeare.

2. To encounter in battle.

Strange to us it seem'd

At first, that angel should with angel war,
And in fierce hostings meet. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

From his loins

New authors of diffension spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sov'reign sway. Phillips.

3. To review a body of men; to muster.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings. Spenser on Ireland.

HOSTAGE. n. f. [ostage, French.] One given in pledge for security of performance of conditions.

Your hostages I have, so have you mine;

And we shall talk before we fight. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopat.

Do this message honourably;

And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best. Shakefp.

He that hath wife and children, hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Bacon, Essay 8.

They who marry give hostages to the publick, that they will not attempt the ruin or disturb the peace of it. Atterbury.

The Romans having seized a great number of hostages, acquainted them with their resolution. Arbutnot on Coins.

HO'STEL. } n. f. [hostel, hostellerie, French.] An inn. Ainsf.

HO'STELRY. } n. f. [hostesse, French, from host.] A female host; a woman that gives entertainment.

Fair and noble hostess,

We are your guest to-night. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Ye were beaten out of door,

And rail'd upon the hostess of the house. Shakespeare.

Be as kind an hostess as you have been to me, and you can never fail of another husband. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

HO'STESS-SHIP. n. f. [from hostess.] The character of an hostess.

It is my father's will I should take on me

The hostess-ship o' th' day: you're welcome, sirs. Shakefp.

H O T

HOSTILE. adj. [hostilis, Latin.] Adverse; opposite; suitable to an enemy.

He has now at last

Giv'n hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Fierce Juno's hate,

Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate. Dryden's Æn.

HO'STILITY. n. f. [hostilité, Fr. from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason nor hostility

To seek to put me down, and reign thyself. Shakefp. H. VI.

Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland. Hayward.

What peace can we return;

But, to our pow'r, hostility and hate,

Untam'd reluctance and revenge? Milt. Parad. Lost, b. ii.

In this bloody dispute we have shewed ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity. Atterbury's Sermons.

HO'STLER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way. Spenser on Ireland.

HOSTRY. n. f. [corrupted from hostelry.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,

And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;

An hostry now for waggons, which before

Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore. Dryden's Georg.

HOT. adj. [pat, Saxon; bat, Scottish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?

—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name

Than any is in hell. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon's Natural History.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;

And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton's Opt.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,

Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember, Jove, thou was't a bull for thy Europa. Shakefp.

3. Strongly affected by sensible qualities: in allusion to dogs hunting.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will he hear,

When in hot scent of gain and full career. Dryden.

4. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, and had put themselves in their full strength, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults, that hath been known. Bacon's War with Spain.

He resolv'd to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery. Clarendon, b. viii.

To court the cry directs us, when we found

Th' assault so hot, as if 'twere only there. Denham.

Our army

Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.

5. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as slow,

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go. Shakefp. Henry IV.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,

But with cold prudence age doth recompense. Denham.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; Æneas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people. Dryd. Fables, Preface.

6. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets. Locke.

Quoth Ralph, a jointure,

Which makes him have so hot a mind t' her. Hudibras.

7. Piquant; acrid.

HO'TRED. n. f. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotbed is this: there was taken horse-dung, old and well rotted; this was laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top was cast sifted earth two fingers deep. Bacon's Nat. History.

Preserve the hotbed as much as possible from rain. Evelyn.

HOTBRAINED. adj. [hot and brain.] Violent; vehement; furious.

You

You shall find 'em either hotbrain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HOTCOCKLES. n. f. [hautes coquilles, French.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.
The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking. Arbuthn. and Pope's Mar. Scribl.
As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye. Gay's Past.

HOTHEADED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.
One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hotheaded, crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbuthnot.

HO'THOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]
1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.
Now she professes a hothouse, which, I think, is a very ill house too. Shak. Measure for Measure.
2. A brothel.
Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hothouse; so it may,
And still be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma. Ben. Johnson.

HO'TLY. adv. [from hot.]
1. With heat; not coldly.
2. Violently; vehemently.
The flag was in the end so hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney.
I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Shak. Coriolanus.
The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the Christians. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute. Boyle.

3. Lustfully.
Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed. Dryden.

HOTMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.] Headstrong; ungovernable.
I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HO'TNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.

HO'TCHPOTCH. n. f. [haché en poche, French; or hachee en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash; a mixture.
Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden's Remains.
A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hotchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon's Natural History.
Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;
But a mash'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryd. Juvenal.

HO'TSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]
1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate and heady.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur, govern'd by a spleen. Shakes. H. IV.
Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators. Burton.
2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.
Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HO'TSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash; heady.
To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment. Peacham.

HOVE. The preterite of heave.

HO'VEL. n. f. [Diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]
1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come. Tusser.
If you make a large hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre. Bacon's Natural History.
Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden.
2. A mean habitation; a cottage.
The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the Summer. Ray on the Creation.

TO HO'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.
And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Shakespeare's King Lear.

HO'VEN. part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.
Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be so hoven, make Cisse to seek creeks. Tusser.

TO HO'VER. v. n. [hovia, to hang over, Welsh]
1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.
Some fiery devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shak. King John.
Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shak. Richard III.
A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden's Æn.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison's Spectator.
'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior.
Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.
The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovers in expectation of new worlds. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.
We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.
The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon.]
1. The lower part of the thigh.
Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men unto the camel's hough. 2 Esd. xiii. 36.
2. [Huë, French.] An adz; an hoe. See HOE.
Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an ax, could cut a god out of a tree? Stillingfleet.

TO HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hamstring; to disable by cutting the sinews of the ham.
Thou shalt hough their horses. Jos. ii. 6.
2. To cut up with an hough or hoe.
3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See TO HAWK.
Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i.

HO'ULET. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern counties still retain it.

HOULT. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.
Or as the wind, in hoults and shady greaves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax.

HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.
Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Are cleft all by the name of dogs. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and slew an undeferving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryd.
The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.

TO HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on the chase.
God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall.
2. To hunt; to pursue.
If the wolves had been bounded by tygers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.

HO'UNDFISH. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HOUNDSTONGUE. n. f. [cynoglossum, Latin.] A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, deeply cut into five parts: the flower consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and cut into five segments: the pointal, which arises from the bottom of the flower, changes into a fruit composed of four rough, each for the most part burry cells, and containing a flat seed affixed to a pyramidal and quadrilateral placenta. The proper season to take the roots up is soon after the leaves decay. Miller.

HO'UNDTREE. n. f. A kind of tree. Ainsworth.

HOUP. n. f. [upupa, Latin.] The puet. Ainsworth.

HOUP. n. f. [heure, French; hora, Latin.]
1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.
See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakesp. H. VI.
2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakesp.
When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden's Æn.

3. The time as marked by the clock.
The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare.
Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 88.
They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison's Guardian.

HO'URGLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]
1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.
Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hour- glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.

O, recollect your thoughts!
Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.
HO'URLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour;
frequent; often repeated.

Alcyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.

HO'URLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.
She deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shak. All's well that ends well.
Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
'Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.

HO'URPLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.
If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUSE. n. f. [pur, Saxon; huys, Dutch; huse, Scottish.]
1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.
Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakespeare.
Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon, Essay 46.

In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square;
yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.

2. Any place of abode.
The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakespeare.

3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common;
monastery; college.
Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where now Constantia resided. Addison's Spectator.

4. The manner of living; the table.
He kept a miserable house, but the blame was laid wholly upon madam. Swift.

5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.
Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.

6. Family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; race.
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shakesp. Henry VI.
An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shak. Meas. for Measurs.
By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

A poet is not born in ev'ry race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden's Fables.

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.

To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To harbour; to admit to residence.
Palladius wished him to house all the Helots, and make themselves masters of the gates. Sidney.

Upon the North-sea a valley *house*th a gentleman, who hath worn out his former name. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Slander lives upon succession,
For ever housed where it gets possession. Shakespeare.
Mere cottagers are but housed beggars. Bacon.

Oh, can your counsel his despair defer,
Who now is housed in his sepulchre? Sandys.
We find them housing themselves under ground in dens. South's Sermons.

In expectation of such times as these,
A chapel hous'd 'em, truly call'd of ease. Dryden.

2. To shelter; to keep under a roof.
As we house hot country plants to save them, so we may house our own to forward them. Bacon's Natural History.

House your choicest carnations, or rather set them under a pent-house, to preserve them in extremity of weather. Evelyn.
Wit in northern climates will not blow,
Except, like orange-trees, 'tis hous'd from snow. Dryden.

To HOUSE. v. n.

1. To take shelter; to keep abode; to reside.
Ne suffer it to house there half a day. Hubberd's Tale.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shak.
Summers three times eight, save one,
She had told; alas, too soon,
After so short time of breath,
To house with darkness and with death. Milton.

2. To have an astrological station in the heavens.
In fear of this, observe the starry signs
Where Saturn houses, and where Hermes joins. Dryden.
I housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought senates and deserting troops are mine. Dryden.

HOUSEBREAKER. n. f. [house and break.] Burglar; one who makes his way into houses to steal.
All housebreakers and sharpers had thief written in their foreheads. L'Estrange.

HOUSEBREAKING. n. f. [house and break.] Burglary.
When he hears of a rogue to be tried for robbing or house- breaking, he will send the whole paper to the government. Swift.

HO'USED OG. n. f. [house and dog.] A mastiff kept to guard the house.

A very good housedog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. L'Estrange.
You see the goodness of the master even in the old house- dog. Addison's Spectator.

HO'USEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakespeare.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wond'rous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xi.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spratt's Sermons.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden's Fables.

Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.
In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a day to prayers. Swift.

2. Family life; domestick management.
An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shakesp. H. VIII.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.
Cornelius called two of his household servants. Acts x. 7.

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milt. Pa. Lost.
It would be endless to enumerate the oaths and blasphemies among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.

HO'USEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.] Master of a family.
A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat. xxi.

HO'USEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [household and stuff.] Furniture of an house; utensils convenient for a family.
In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his close is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.
A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Bacon's Henry VII.
The poor woman had her jest for her householdstuff, and paid her physician with a conceit for his money. L'Estrange.

HO'USEKEEPER. n. f. [house and keep.]
1. Householder; master of a family.
To be said an honest man and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar. Shakespeare.
If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively. Locke.
2. One who lives in plenty.
The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than houseraisers. Wotton.
3. One who lives much at home.
How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.
Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.
5. A housedog.
Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakesf. Macbeth.

HO'USEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.] Domestick; useful to a family.
His house, for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other house- keeping commodities, challengeth the pre-eminence. Carew.

HO'USEKEEPING. n. f. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.
I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakespeare.
His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shewed the master's hospitality. Prior.

HO'USEL. n. f. [hupl, Saxon, from hunsel, Gothick, a sacrifice, or hostia, dimin. hostiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.
To HO'USEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To give or receive the eucharist. Both the noun and verb are obsolete.

HO'USELEEK. n. f. [house and leek.] A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose; out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterwards turns to a fruit, composed, as it were, of many seed-vessels resembling hulks, which are collected into a sort of head, and full of small seeds. The species are six. Miller.
The acerbs supply their quantity of cruder acids; as juices of apples, grapes, the sorrels, and houseleek. Floyer.

HO'USELESS. adj. [from house.] Without abode; wanting habitation.
Poor naked wretches,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you. Shakesf.
This hungry, houseless, suffering, dying Jesus, fed many thousands with five loaves and two fishes. West.

HO'USEMAID. n. f. [house and maid.] A maid employed to keep the house clean.
The housemaid may put out the candle against the lookingglass. Swift.

HO'USEROOM. n. f. [house and room.] Place in a house.
*House*room, that costs him nothing, he bestows;
Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose. Dryden's Juv.

HO'USESNAIL. n. f. A kind of snail.

HO'USEWARMING. n. f. [house and warm.] A feast or merry-making upon going into a new house.

HO'USING. n. f. [from house.]
1. Quantity of inhabited building.
London is supplied with people to increase its inhabitants, according to the increase of housing. Graunt.
2. [From houseaux, heuses, or houses, French.] Cloath originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.

HO'USLING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.
His own two hands the holy knot did knit,
That none but death for ever can divide;
His own two hands, for such a turn most fit,
The housing fire did kindle and provide. Fairy Queen, b. i.

HOUSS. n. f. [from houseaux, or houses, French.] Covering of cloath originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings. This word, though used by Dry- den, I do not remember in any other place.

Six lions hides, with thongs together fast,
His upper part defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the houjs and trappings of a beast. Dryd.

HO'USEWIFE. n. f. [house and wife.] This is now frequently written huswife, or hussy. The mistress of a family.
You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.
I have room enough, but the kind and hearty huswife is dead. Pope to Swift.

3. A female œconomist.
Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.
Let us fit and mock the good housewife, fortune, from her wheel, that her gift may henceforth be disposed equally. Shak.
Farmers in degree,
He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.
Early housewives leave the bed,
When living embers on the hearth are spread. Dryden.
The fairest among the daughters of Britain shew themselves good statewomen as well as good housewives. Addis. Freehold.

3. One skilled in female business.
He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, 'till she made him as good an housewife as herself: he could preserve apricocks, and make jellies. Addison's Spectator.

HO'USEWIFELY. adj. [from housewife.] Skilled in the acts becoming a housewife.

HO'USEWIFELY. adv. [from housewife.] With the œconomy of a housewife.

HO'USEWIFERY. n. f. [from housewife.]
1. Domestick or female business; management becoming the mistress of a family.
You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in house-
wiferies. Chapman's Iliads.
Little butter was exported abroad, and that discredited by the housewifery of the Irish in making it up. Temple.

2. Female œconomy.
Learn good works for necessary uses; for St. Paul expresses the obligation of Christian women to good housewifery, and charitable provisions for their family and neighbourhood. Tayl.

HOW. adv. [hu, Saxon; hoe, Dutch.]
1. In what manner; to what degree.
How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me?
Ex. x. 3.
How much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver? Prov. xvi. 16.
How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? And how oft cometh their destruction upon them? Job xxi. 17.
O how love I thy law: it is my meditation. Psf. cxix. 97.
How many children's plaints, and mother's cries!
How many woful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace! Daniel's Civil War.
Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Boyle.

2. In what manner.
Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shak.
Prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom, or how else. Milton's Agonistes.
We examine the why, the what, and the how of things.
L'Estrange.
'Tis much in our power hw to live; but not at all when or how to die. L'Estrange.
It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little re-publick are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.
How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the roses there do fade so fast? Shakespeare.

4. By what means.
How is it thou hast found it so quickly. Gen. xxvii. 10.
Men would have the colours of birds feathers, if they could tell how; or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes. Bacon's Natural History.

5. In what state.
For how shall I go up to my father? Gen. xlv. 34.
Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born?
How, and with what reproach shall I return? Dryden's Æn.

6. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.
Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less on them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust. Job iv. 19.
A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.
By how much they wou'd diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth. Bentley's Sermons.

7. It

7. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen!

Sam.

How doth the city sit solitary as a widow.

Lam. i. 1.

8. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

HOWBE'IT. } adv. [how be it.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding.

HOWBE. } ing; yet; however. Not now in use.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorrel,

Of heaven to deem so,

Howbe I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know.

Spenser.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily, any longer than 'till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not.

Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

There was no army transmitted out of England, howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish.

Davies on Ireland.

HOWD'YE. [Contracted from how do ye.] In what state is your health. A message of civility.

Years make men more talkative, but less writative; so that I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howd'ye's, to those few I am forced to correspond with.

Pope.

HOWE'VER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds

In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,

To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,

Howe'er repented of. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

To trace the ways

Of highest agents, deem'd however wise. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, however from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, however the chiefest.

Tillotson, Sermon 1.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your excuse your love does little say;

You might howe'er have took a fairer way.

Dryden.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects.

Addison on Italy.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, however I do not exclude it.

Aitkenbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, however, be a very useful enquiry.

Swift.

TO HOWL. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise

I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakesp.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

Deutr. xxxii. 10.

As when a sort of wolves infest the night,

With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light. Waller.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,

Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;

He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii.

The damned use that word in hell,

Howlings attend it. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Each new morn

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows

Strike heaven on the face, that it rebounds

As if it felt with Scotland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I have words

That would be howl'd out in the desert air,

Where hearing should not catch them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The noise grows louder still:

Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;

And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns,

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings

Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To speak with a belluine cry or tone.

Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale

To savages, and howl it out in deserts!

Me would'st thou make the accomplice of thy crimes?

A. Phillips's Distress Mother.

4. It is used poetically of any noise loud and horrid.

HOWL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Murther,

Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog dissected alive. Swift.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,

And fills with horrid howls the publick place. Dryden's En.

HOWSOE'VER. adv. [how and soever.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWEVER.

Berosus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree. Raleigh's History of the World.

2. Although.

The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

TO HOX. v. a. [from hox, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.

Thou art a coward,

Which boxes honesty behind, restraining

From course required.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword boxed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves. Knolles.

HOY. n. f. [hou, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;

From whence eftsoons arrived here three boys

Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs. Fairy Queen.

To define a barge and boy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard. Watt's Logick.

HU'BUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up up, or hobnob.] A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Clarendon.

An universal hubbub wild

Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,

Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear

With loudest vehemence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,

And dogs howl when she shines in water. Hudibras, p. ii.

HU'CKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

HU'CKLEBACKED. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HU'CKSTERER. } pedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise. Government of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion. South's Sermons.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,

And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,

The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,

But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown. Gay.

There should be a general confederacy of all the servants in every family, for the publick good, to drive those China hucksters from the doors. Swift.

Those hucksterers or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass money is made current. Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man. Hubb. Tale.

TO HU'CKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.

TO HU'DDLE. v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;

Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two. Prior.

Now all in haste they huddle on

Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,

Let him forecast his work with timely care,

Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryd. Virgil.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To HUDDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so buddled on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakespeare.
Brown answered after his blunt and buddling manner. Bacon.
Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd

The buddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, buddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HUDDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion.
That the Aristotelian philosophy is a buddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanv.

Your carrying business in a buddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras, p. iii.

Nature doth nothing in a buddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote,
and in a buddle. Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a buddle of ideas. Addison's Spectator.

HUE. n. f. [hepe, Saxon.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly bue. Fairy Qu.
For now three months have changed thrice their bue.
Fairy Queen, canto viii.

To add another bue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakesp. King John.

Flow'rs of all bue, and without thorn the rose. Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper bue, Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Your's is much of the camelion bue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.

2. [Huée, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone:
fly, run, bue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakespeare.

Immediately comes a bue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;

And, like a culprit, join the bue and cry. Addison.

The bue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

HUER. n. f. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Surv. of Cornw.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: buff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a buff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by only in a lord;
In others it is but a buff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras, p. ii.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose buff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very buff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the buff about his ex-trañion. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present buff. South's Sermons.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

Lewd shallow-brained buffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.

As for you, colonel buff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them buff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

A buffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A buffing officer and slave. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

Buffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'lous fools a knave. Roscommon.

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say!

What, a fifth act to crown his buffing play? Dryd. Juvenal.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those buffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she buffed and stormed like the devil. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

HUFFER. n. f. [from buff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art

To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio buffer. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

HUFFISH. adj. [from buff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.

HUFFISHLY. adv. [from buffish.] With arrogant petulance;
with bullying bluster.

HUFFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

To HUG. v. a. [hexian, Saxon, to hedge, to inclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms. Shakesp. Richard III.

What would not he do now to bug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade! L'Estrange.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And bug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would bug and kifs. Harvey on Conjunctions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplaussible,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And bug him into snares. Milton.

We bug deformities, if they bear our names. Glanville.

Admire yourself,

And, without rival, bug your darling book. Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms bug the abuse. South's Sermons.

Mark with what joy he bugs the dear discovery! Roue.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly bug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Atterb.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.] Close embrace.

Why these close bugs? I owe my shame to him. Gay.

HUGE. adj. [hoog, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker, b. iv.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Abbot.

2. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakesp.

Through forests huge, and long untravell'd heaths,

With desolation brown he wanders waste. Thomson's Spring.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,

That can therein tax any private party?

Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakesp. As you like it.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.] Enormous bulk; greatness.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from hug or morcker, or hug in the dark. Mercker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, hoker moker.
Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; bye-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,

And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Hubberd's Tale.

But if I can but find them out,

Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,

I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras, p. i.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L'Estrange's Fables.

HUGY. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge.

This hugy rock one finger's force

Apparently will move. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HUKE. n. f. [buque, French.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huke. Bacon's New Atlantis.

HULK. n. f. [hulcke, Dutch; hulc, Saxon.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakesp.

The custom they had of giving the colour of the sea to the bulks, sails, and mariners of their spy-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbutnot.

They Argo's bulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.

The footy bulk Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a bulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

To HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to bulk a hare. Ainsw.

HULL. n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a sensible and thinking creature.

Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i. c. 5.

To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.
—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shak.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood,
Which now abated. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xi.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof sail for to make. Tusser.

To HUM. v. a. [hummelen, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.
An airy nation flew,

Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In Summer's heat. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakesp.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakesp.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And humm'd upon it, thus he writ, Hudibras, p. iii.

I still acquieft,
And never humm'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffled treason. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

4. To sing low.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate hummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glanv. Apol.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

5. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. The noise of bustling crowds.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakesp. Hen. V.

Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope's Dunciad.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said she's goodly, come between,
'Ere you can say she's honest. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

and ha will not do the business. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums
And the horses backs o'er which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras, p. i. cant. II.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

See sir Robert—hum!
And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Latin; humain, French.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will not be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature. Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakesp.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton's P. L.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

humid. Newton's Opt.

HUMIDITY. n. ſ. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moiſture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It diſfers very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the con-gruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or ſurfaces of ſuch particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quickſilver is not a moiſt liquor, in reſpect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not ſtick to;

but it may be called ſo in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whoſe ſurfaces it will preſently adhere. And even water itſelf, that wets almoſt every thing, and is the great ſtandard of hu- midity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it ſtands and runs eaſily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, ſwans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll uſe this unwholſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakeſpeare.

O bleſſing-breeding ſun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity: below thy ſiſter's orb

Inſect the air. Shakeſp. Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and reliſhing. Arbuthnot on Diet.

HUMILIA'TION. n. ſ. [French.]

1. Deſcent from greatneſs; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humi- liation of manhood; for which cauſe there followed upon the latter latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience.

Hooker, b. v. f. 55.

Thy humiliation shall exalt

With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milt. Pa. Lost.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.
John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears

Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. Pa. Lost.

3. Abatement of pride.
It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakesp. Richard III.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Claren.

There are some that use
Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. Denham's Sophy.

It is an easy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. South's Sermons.

As high turrets, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] An applauder. Ainsworth.

HU'MORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HU'MORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts's Logick.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison's Spectator.

2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wise and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shakesp. King John.

He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben. Johnson.

Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logick.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

HU'MOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls, very humorously, con-
cisum argentum in titulos facie/que minutas. Addison on Medals.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fillily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. With caprice; with whim.

HU'MOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.] Fickleness; capricious levity.

HU'MORSOME. adj. [from humour.]

1. Peevish; petulant.

2. Odd; humorous.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorsome disguises. Swift.

HU'MORSOMELY. adv. [from humorsome.] Peevishly; petulantly.

HUMOUR. n. f. [humeur, French; humor, Latin.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed

From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton's Agonistes.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney, b. ii.

There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: said the king, I will be king of Lufen. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,

And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison's Freeholder.

Good humour only teaches charms to last,

Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shakesp. K. John.

Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax, b. ii.

Their humours are not to be won,

But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras, p. iii.

Tempt not his heavy hand;

But one submissive word which you let fall,

Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

6. Diseased or morbid disposition.

He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

7. Petulance; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South's Sermons.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have born the humour'd letter to her. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon's Essays.

To HU'MOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to sooth by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakesp.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humour me. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts, and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governours. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick;

Why not when I am splenetick?

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and fullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts's Logick.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man,

That with smooth air could'st humour best our tongue. Milt.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden's Preface to Albion.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison's Guardian.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by succeeding matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the hump fell.

Tatler, No. 74.

HUMPBAC. n. f. [hump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with an humpback and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPBAC'KED. adj. Having a crooked back.

TO HUNCH. v. a. [husch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fists.

Jack's friends began to hunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbuthnot.

2. [Hocker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back,

And wander'd in thy limbs: to thy own kind

Make love, if thou can'st find it in the world. Dryden.

HUNCHBA'CKED. adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!

To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,

Th' excrescence of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbuthn. Hist. of J. Bull.

HUNDRED. adj. [pund, pundred, Saxon; henderd, Dutch.]

The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A base, proud, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted stocking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,

A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryd. Æn.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. f.

1. A company or body consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbuthnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hundrede, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayw.

HUNDREDTH. adj. [hundneontezopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,

What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden's Juvenal.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [hungen, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach; and this is occasioned by the attrition of the coats of the stomach against each other. Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst.

Deutr. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Grew.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

TO HU'NGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,

As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness.

Do'st thou so hunger for my empty chair,

That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,

Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,

Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!

Stay but a little. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

My more having, would be as a sauce

To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I content me,

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,

Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed

Me hung'ring more to do my father's will. Milton's P. Lost.

HU'NGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weak-

HU'NGERBITTEN. } ened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side. Job xviii. 12.

Thyself

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;

Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton's Parad. Reg.

HU'NGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard

Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask

His sops as he was drinking. Shakesf. Taming of the Shrew.

HU'NGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longing, and I feed

Most hungerly on your sight. Shak. Timon of Athens.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,

They belch us. Shakespeare's Othello.

HU'NGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe

Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,

Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakesp. H. VI.

O'ertake me, if thou can'st; I scorn thy strength:

Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakesp. H. VI.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,

Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,

Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HU'NGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

HU'NGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,

Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;

When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,

And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden's Juven.

HU'NGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals

Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Lo ke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakesf. Jul. Caesar.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon's Natural History.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalbridge's Sermons.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunkur, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks, worth money. Addison's Spectator.

H U N

To HUNT. v. a. [hunterian, Saxon, from huna, a dog.]

1. To chafe wild animals.
The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shak. H.V.
Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job xxxviii. 39.
We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison's Spectator.
2. To pursue; to follow close.
Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pf. cxi.
The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that fain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.
3. To search for.
Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.
All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.
4. To direct or manage hounds in the chace.
He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison's Spectator.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chafe.
When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Esaú went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen. xxvii. 5.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking
and hunting. Locke.
On the old pagan tombs masks, hunting matches, and Bac-chanals are very common. Addison on Italy.
2. To pursue or search.
Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.
The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.
2. A chace.
The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakefp.

3. Pursuit.
I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HU'NTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chafes animals for pastime.
If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.
Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milt. Par. Lost.
Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.
This was the arms or device of our old Roman hun- ters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.
Bold Nimrod first the savage chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.
2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.
Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakefp. Macbeth.

- HU'NTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.
Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

- HU'NTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chace.
And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakefp.
Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope's Windsor Forest.
Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder;
but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

- HU'NTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]
1. One who delights in the chace.
Like as a huntsman, after weary chace,

H U R

Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

- Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chace? Waller,
2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chace.
Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chace, than to the master. L'Estrange's Fables.
- HUN'TSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give th' art of rhiming, huntsmanship, or play. Donne.

HU'RDL. n. f. [hurdle, Saxon.] A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakespeare.
The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Ty-burn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after times. Bacon's Henry VII.

The sled, the tumbril, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

To HURL. v. a. [from hurle, to throw down, Islandick; or,
according to Skinner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.
If heav'ns have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it 'till thy fins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakespeare's Richard III.
He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Shak. R. III.
I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakef. Henry VI.
If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Num. xxxv. 20.
They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones.
Chron. xii. 2.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. Ben. Johnson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded blifs. Milton's Parad. Lost.

She strikes the lute; but if it sound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From East to North irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryd. Juven.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope's Iliad.

2. To utter with vehemence. [Hurler, French, to make an howling or hideous noise.]
The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from watry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.
Highly they rag'd against the Higheft,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of heav'n. Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.
Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; riot; commotion.
He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

HU'RLBAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat. Ainsworth.

HU'RLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.
The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HU'RLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

HU'RLY. } n. f. [I have been told that this word owes its HU'RLYBURLY. } original to two neighbouring families named
Hurly and Burly, or Hurleigh and Burleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with contests and violence. If this account be rejected, the word must be derived from hurl, hurly, and burly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlade, French; hur- lubrelu, inconsiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakefp. H. IV.

Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

Methinks, I see this burly all on foot. Shakesp. K. John.
 All places were filled with tumult and burlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.
HURRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan, French.] A
HURRICANO. } violent storm, such as is often experienced in the eastern hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
 Your cataracts and hurricanes spout. Shakesp. K. Lear.
 A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
 In corners with selected friends withdraw;
 There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
 Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.
 So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
 Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
 Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
 Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.
TO HURRY. v. a. [pergian, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.
 Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
 To offer service to your enemy;
 And wild amazement hurries up and down
 The little number of your doubtful friends. Shakespeare.
 For whom all this haste
 Of midnight marches, and hurried meeting here? Milton.
 Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy the cravings of it. South's Sermons.

That hurried o'er
 Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.
 A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison's Spectator.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
 That hurry you away. Rowe's Royal Convert.
 If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
TO HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.
 Did you but know what joys your way attend,
 You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryd. Aurengz.
HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.
 It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South's Sermons.
 After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodw.
 Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addis. Spectator.
 A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison's Guardian.
 I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addis.
 The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
 And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay's Trivia.
HURST. n. f. [hynst, Sax.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ainsf.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDRO'PICAL. } adj. [ὑδροπικός; hydropique, French; from HYDRO'PICK. } hydrops, Latin.] Dropical; diseased with extravasated water.
Cantharides heats the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydropical water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydropick earth hath drunk;
Whither, as to the bedsfeet, life is shrunk,
Dead and interr'd. Donne.

Some mens hydropick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Hydropical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wisem.

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson's Sermons.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropies, viz. the water of the hydropicks, which is a remedy for the disease. Arbutnot.

HYDROSTA'TICAL. adj. [ὑδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, Fr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.
A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.
The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley's Sermons.

HYDROSTA'TICKS. n. f. [ὑδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO'TICK. n. f. [ὑδωρ; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.
He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile. Arbutnot on Coins.

HY'EN. } n. f. [hyene, French; hyæna, Latin.] An animal like HYE'NA. } a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.
I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find;
The hyena shews it, of a double kind:
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson's Summer.

HYGROMETER. n. f. [ὑγρός and μέτρον; hygrometre, French.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.
A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbutnot on Air.

HYGROSCOPE. n. f. [ὑγρός and σκοπέω; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbutnot.

HYLA'RGICAL.

HYLA'RCHICAL. adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχή.] Presiding over matter.

HYM. n. f. A species of dog.

Avaunt, you curs!

Maftiff, greyhound, mungril grim,

Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;

Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,

Tom will make him weep and wail. Shakesp. King Lear.

HY'MEN. n. f. [ὕμην.]

1. The god of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENE'AL. } n. f. [ὕμηναιος.] A marriage song.

HYMENE'AN. } And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung. Milt. Par. Lost.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneal's sing.

Pope.

HYMENE'AL. } adj. Pertaining to marriage.

HYMENE'AN. }

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice

A signal of her hymeneal choice.

Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN. n. f. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame;

So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I eke should frame.

Spenser.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarfe. Shakespeare.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made

An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewel, you happy shades,

Where angels first should practise hymns, and string

Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing. Dryd.

TO HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνέω.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

TO HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd

God and his works.

Milton.

He had not left alive this patient faint,

This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence

To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,

And hymn it in the quire.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HY'MNICK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

Donne.

TO HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypped since I saw you. Speet.

HY'PALLAGE. n. f. [ὕπαλλαγή.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HY'PER. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,

And hypers upon them again.

Prior.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbola's very eccentric. Bentley's Serm.

HY'PERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakesp.

Terms unsquar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,

Would seem hyperboles. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanv. Scefs. c. 1.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,

Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;

Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,

They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Glanv.

The common people understand raillery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYPERBO'LLICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, French; from hyper-

HYPERBO'LLICK. } bola.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew's Musæum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.

HYPERBO'LLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBO'LLIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperborien, French; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRITICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπερ and κριτικός.] A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryd.

HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilio's, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swi t.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερ and μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison's Guardian.

HYPERSCARCO'SIS. n. f. [ὑπερσάρκωσις, ὑπερ and σαρξός.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hyperscarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction. Wiseman's Surgery.

HY'PHEN. n. f. [ὕφην.] A note of conjunction: as, vir-tue, ever-living.

HYPNO'TICK. n. f. [ὑπνος.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHONDRES. n. f. [hypochondre, Fr. ὑποχόνδριον.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL. } adj. [hypochondriaque, French, from

HYPOCHONDRIACK. } hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. History.

HY'POCIST. n. f. [ὑπόκισις; hypociste, French.]

Hypocist is an inspissated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy; and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are gathered before they are ripe; and the juice is expressed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power. Hill's Mat. Med.

HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisie, Fr. ὑπόκρισις.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,

Soft smiling and demurely looking down;

But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκριτής.] A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer : I date swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.

A wise man hateth not the law ; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclus. xxxiii. 3.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain ;

Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryden.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy ; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

Beware, ye honest : the third circling glass

Suffices virtue : but may hypocrites,

Who sily speak one thing, another think,

Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,

And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere. Phillips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling ; insin-

HYPOCRITICK. } cere ; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities ; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world ; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Roger's Sermons.

Let others skew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation ; without sincerity ; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, French ; ὑπο and γαστήρ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wifeman's Surgery.

HYPOGE'UM. n. f. [ὑπο and γή.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypostase, French ; ὑπόστασις]

1. Distinct substance.
2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient more simple article. Hammond on Fundamentals.

HYPOSTA'TICAL. adj. [hyposta'tique, French, from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive ; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, 'till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal ; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENU'SE. n. f. [hypotenuse, Fr. ὑποτένυσα.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle ; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition ; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, 'till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together ; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South's Sermon.

With imagin'd sovereignty

Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns :

He reigns : how long ? 'till some usurper rise ;

And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,

Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypothesis.] In-

HYPOTHE'TICK. } cluding a supposition ; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if ; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts's Logick.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition ; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess ; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broome's Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

HYRST, }
HURST, } Are all from the Saxon hýrst, a wood or grove. Gibb.
HERST, }

HY'SSOP. n. f. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves : the crest of the flower is roundish, erect, and divided into two parts : the beard is divided into three parts ; the middle part is hollowed like a spoon, having a double point, and is somewhat winged : the whorls of the flowers are short, and at the lower part of the stalk are placed at a great distance ; but toward the top are closer joined, so as to form a regular spike. It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop ; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls ; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYS'TERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, French ; ὑστερικὸς.]

HYS'TERICK. }

1. Troubled with fits ; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike such an astonishment into spectators, that they report them possessed with the devil. Harvey on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,

Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope's Ra. of the Lock.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutn and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

HYS'TERICKS. n. f. [ὑστερικὸς.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

J A C

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.

I consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

1. pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us.

ic, me, pe, ur.

i. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I. Shakesp. Rich. III.

There is none greater in this house than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.

Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat. xiv. 27.

What shall I do to be for ever known,

And make the age to come my own?

I shall like beasts or common people dye,

Unless you write my elegy.

Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me.

Cowley.

When chance of business parts us two,

What do our souls, I wonder, do?

Cowley.

Of that book you have given us a large earnest.

Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,

I to my longing friends return again.

Dryden's Æn.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me.

Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,

And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more

Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice.

Shakespeare.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down.

Shakespeare.

To JA'BBER. v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties.

Swift.

JA'BBERER. n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers

At all their dialects of jabberers.

Hudibras, p. iii.

JA'CENTE adj. [jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture.

Wotton's Architect.

JACINTH. n. f. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep redish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber.

Woodward's Met. Foss.

JACK. n. f. [Probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for faucy or paltry fellows.

I am in estimation:

You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot

Office me from my son Coriolanus.

Shakespeare.

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,

Which I will practise.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

Shakesp.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wifeman's Surgery.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks

Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. [Jacque, French.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup

From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley's Sermons.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon's Natural History.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Coins.

10. A support to saw wood on.

Ainsworth.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship.

Ainsworth.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.

Jack of all trades, shew and sound;

An inverse burse, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.

JACK Boots. n. f. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commode and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the Hedge. n. f. An herb.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other sallads are, and much used in broth. Mortim.

JACK Pudding. n. f. [jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,

Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

JACK with a Lantern. An ignis fatuus.

JACKALE'NT. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starven fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackal'ent, have you been true to us?

—Ay, I'll be sworn.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

JACKA'L. n. f. [chacal, French.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send:

Close by their fireships, like jackals, appear,

Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

The

The mighty lyon, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbuth. and Pope's M. Scrib.

JACKANAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.
2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?

—That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakesp.

People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbuth.
JACKDA'W. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JACKET. n. f. [jacquet, French.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.
In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Hubberd's Tale.
And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.
Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.
2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

JACOB'S Ladder. n. f. The same with Greek valerian.

JACOB'S Staff. n. f.

1. A pilgrim's staff.
2. Staff concealing a dagger.
3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

JACOBINE. n. f. A pidgeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.

JACTITATION. n. f. [jactito, Latin.] Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surpris'd with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harv.

JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Lost.
JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad, or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.
Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the tryal. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakesp.

To other regions
France is a stable, we that dwell in't jades;
Therefore to th' war. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

So have I seen with armed heel
A wight besride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,
The less the fullen jade has stirr'd. Hudibras, p. i.
The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

Falfe steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman's Iliads.
But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
By sharing female bounties. Stepney.

Get in, huffy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southerne's Innocent Adultery.

In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is, a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is compos'd of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not simple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant and high polish. It is found in the East Indies, and is much used by the Turks for handles of sabres. It is so highly esteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine stone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preserve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill's Materia Medica.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary.
With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon's Essays.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast,
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden's Juven.
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts's Logick.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If, we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewel nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.
The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South's sermons.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vicious; bad, as an horse.
That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras, p. iii.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.
2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Natural History.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any small plain curls. Bac.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentl.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation. The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mort. Husbandry.

JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson's Autumn.

JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, French.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakesp.

A dependant upon him paid six pound ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison. Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden's Æn.

Palamon, the pris'n'r knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office:
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Their sordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juvenal.
Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe 'till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambé, French.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney *jamb*s. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

IAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,

It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame

In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

TO J'ANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,

This civil war of wits were much better us'd

On Navarre and his book-men. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.

So far am I glad it did so fort,

As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

TO J'ANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneable.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,

Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shak. Haml.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,

And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes

Had jangle'd their fantastick chimes. Prior.

J'ANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

J'ANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand visier, presuming to invest

The chief imperial city of the West,

With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;

The standards lost, and janizaries slain,

Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

J'ANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

J'ANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flattern: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

J'ANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peacham.

JAPA'N. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

TO JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire

Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,

And aids with soot the new japanning art. Gay's Trivia.

JAPA'NNER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblack.

The poor have the same itch;

They change their weekly barber, weekly news,

Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.

TO JAR. v. n. [from eoppe, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war,
French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

A hollow groan, a murmur'ing wind arose;

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,

Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably.

O, you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature:

Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,

Of this child-changed father. Shakespeare. King Lear.

I perceive you delight not in musick.

—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakespeare.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,

And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscommon.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,

And every passion aptly harmoniz'd

Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakespeare.

For orders and degrees

Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Venulus concluded his report:

A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:

As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,

The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,

Roars horrible. Dryden's Æn.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,

Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,

Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,

Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,

And yet his peace is but continual jar:

O miserable men, that to him subject are! Fairy Queen.

Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are

Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubberd's Tale.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,

Between whose endless jar justice presides,

Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakespeare.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,

Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,

Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

J'ARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied.
It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

J'ARGON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerigonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?

Just as much, perhaps, as shows

That all his predecessor's rules

Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

J'ARGONELLE. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.

J'ASHAWK. n. f. A young hawk. Ainsworth.

J'ASMINE. n. f. [jasmin, French. It is often pronounced jefsamine.]

It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is cut into several segments at the brim, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which afterward becomes the fruit or pod, which, for the most part, grows double and open lengthwise, discovering the seeds, which are oblong, and have a border round them: these are ranged over each other like scales on a house, and are fastened to the placenta. Miller.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;

From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JASMINE Persian. n. f. A plant. See LILAC, of which it is a species.

JASPER. n. f. [jaspe, Fr. iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill's Mat. Med.
The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward's Met. Foss.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLEPTICK. adj. [iatrialeptique, Fr. ιατρὸς and ἀλείφω.] That which cures by anointing.

TO JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering fellow. When as time, flying with wings swift,

Expired had the term that those two javels

Should render up a reckoning of their travels. Hubb. Tale.

JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend

With dart and jav'lin, stones and sulph'rous fire;

On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt. Pa. Lost.

She shakes her myrtle jav'lin; and, behind,

Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden's Æn.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,

Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis. Cato.

JA'UNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice

By being peevish? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks? Shak.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou couldst judge aright,

'Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the foul, tintured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the real appearances of things.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,

As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

TO JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,

And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;

Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shak. R. II.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion.

It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,

After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,

Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milt. Par. Reg.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,

Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras, p. iii.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JA'UNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunty, or janty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airyness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison's Spectator.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence joowbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinal. Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable. Grew's Musæum.

More formidable hydra stands within,

Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psf. xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws,

And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird.

Two sharp winged sheers,

Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,

Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholsome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakesp.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,

Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakespeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,

Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings. Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Diët.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eyse, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or hailstone in the sun. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakesp. R. III.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,

Atchieve the elder, set the younger free

For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,

Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shakespeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wife,

At last broke silence and the ice.

Hudibras, p. iii.

TO ICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ἰχθυόμων.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMONFLY. n. f. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects. Derham's Physico-Theol.

ICHNOGRAPHY. n. f. [ἰχθυόγραφω and γραφω.] The groundplot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself. Moxon.

ICHOR. n. f. [ἰχὼρ.] A thin watery humour like serum. Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Sanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial sanious or ichorous exulceration. Harvey on Consumptions.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthyologie, Fr. ἰχθυολογία, from ἰχθύς and λόγος.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ἰχθύς and φάγω.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subiding powder, dried, retains some magnetical virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown's Vulgar Err.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,

Long icicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard. Dryd.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grotto's. Woodward's Nat. History.

ICINESS. n. f. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

ICON. n. f. [εἰκὼν.] A picture or representation.

Boyardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Hakewill on Providence.

ICO'NOCLAST. n. f. [iconoclaste, French; ἱκονοκλάστης.] A breaker of images.

ICONO'LOGY. n. f. [iconologie, French; εἰκὼν and λέγω.] The doctrine of picture or representation.

ICTERICAL. n. f. [ictérique, French; icterus, Latin.]

1. Afflicted with the jaundice.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the icterical have a great sourness, and gripes with windiness. Floyer.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind. Shakespeare.
He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cros display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shakesp. Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare's Richard III.

ID. Contracted for I would.

IDE'A. n. f. [idée, French; ἰδέα.] Mental imagination.
Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker, b. i.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.
I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,

Both in your form and nobleness of mind. Shakesp. R. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set. Dryden.

IDE'AL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Chayne's Phil. Prin.

IDE'ALLY. adv. [from ideal] Intellectually; mentally.
A transmissiion is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IDE'NTICAL. adj. [identique, French.] The same; imply-

IDE'NTICK. ing the same thing; comprising the same idea.
The beard's th' identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras, p. ii.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale's Origin of Man.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South's Sermon.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

It cuts off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, and consequently produces too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the

IDL

Romans, and still retained in the Romish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevoux.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakesp.
IDIO'CRASY. n. f. [idiocrase, French; ἰδιό and κράσις.] Peculiarity of constitution.

IDIOCRATICAL. adj. [from idiocrasy.] Peculiar in constitution.

IDIOCY. n. f. [ιδιώα.] Want of understanding.

I stand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horses did eat their bits. Bacon's Holy War.

IDIOM. n. f. [idiome, French; ἰδιῶμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMATICAL. adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue;

IDIOMATICK. phrasological.
Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Speñat r.

IDIO'PATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. ἰδιό and πάθος.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Qui.

IDIOSYNCRASY. n. f. [idiosynacrasi, Fr. ἰδιό, σύν, and κράσις.] A peculiar temper or disposition not common to another. Qui.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Glanv. Sceps. c. 15.

IDIOT. n. f. [idiotie, Fr. idiotia, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them idiots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh's Essays.

By idle boys and idiots vilify'd,
Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

IDIOTISM. n. f. [idiotisme, French; ιδιωτισμός.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecillity of mind.

IDLE. adj. [ydel, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame, so much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not busy; at leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shak.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's sound
Was heard the world around,
The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in the fury of a tempest, will rather perish than work for their preservation; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?

Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. Worthless; barren; not productive of good.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use? Fairy Queen.

Of antres vast, and desarts idle,
It was my hent to speak. Shakespeare's Othello.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakesp. King Lear.

He

- He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakesp. King Lear.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker, b. ii.
His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions.
Rogers's Sermons.
- To IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.
- IDLEHEADED. adj. [idle and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.
These idleheaded seekers resorted thither. Carew.
Upon this loss she fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.
- IDLENESS. n. f. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South's Sermon.
  2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney, b. ii.
To the English court assemble now,
From ev'ry region, apes of idleness. Shakesp. Henry IV.
He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden's Ovid.
Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.
  3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
  4. Unimportance; trivialness.
  5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
  6. Barrenness; worthlessness.
  7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.
There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon's War with Spain.
- IDLER. n. f. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.
Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.
Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.
- IDLY. adv. [from idle.]
1. Lazily; without employment.
I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakesp. Henry VI.
  2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
  3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shakesp. K. John.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.
  4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.
- IDOL. n. f. [idole, French; ἰδωλον; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.
A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton's Parad. Lost.
The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.
  2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii. 17.

3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.
  4. A representation.
Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Qu.
  5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldiers god, and people's idol. Denham's Sophy.
- IDO'LATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idololatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.
The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.
An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley's Sermons.
- To IDO'LATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Ainsl.
- IDO'LATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.
Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacham on Drawing.
- IDO'LATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.
Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done
idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.
- IDO'LATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idololatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shakespeare.
Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances.
South's Sermons.
The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison's Spectator.
- IDOLIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought
Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton's Agonistes.
- To IDOLIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.
Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.
- IDO'NEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.
You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.
An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliffe.
- IDYL. n. f. [ἰδύλλιον; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem.
- I. E. for id est, or that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.
- JE'ALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shak. Othello.
Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryd. Aurengz.
  2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.
  3. Zealously

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour:
I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.
4. Suspiciously vigilant.
I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor. ii. 2.
His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon, b. viii.
5. Suspiciously careful.
Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon's Henry VII.
They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
Protecting fate supreme. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Piety.
6. Suspiciously fearful.
'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.
- JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.
- JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.
- JEALOUSY. n. f. [jalouffe, French, from jealous.]
1. Suspicion in love.
But gnawing jealousy, out of their fight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Queen.
The sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man. Shakespeare.
How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair;
And shudd'ring fear, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thy extasy. Shakespeare.
Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needful jealousy? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.
2. Suspicious fear.
The obstinacy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarend.
3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.
- TO JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.
The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- TO JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.
My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel's England's Tears.
- JEER. n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.
Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.
They tipt the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say—she wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.
- JEERER. n. f. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.
- JEERINGLY. adj. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.
He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are refracted? Derham's Physico-Theology.
- JEGGET. n. f. A kind of fausage. Ainsworth.
- JEHOVAH. n. f. [יְהוָה.] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.
- JEJUNE. adj. [jejunus, Latin.]
1. Wanting; empty; vacant.
Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty: the melting sheweth that it is not jejune, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.
2. Hungry; not saturated.
In gross and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not jejune or limpid water. Brown's Vulgar Err.
3. Dry; unaffecting.
You may look upon an inquiry made up of meer narratives, as somewhat jejune. Boyle.
- JEJUNENESS. n. f. [from jejune.]
1. Penury; poverty.
There are three causes of fixation: the even spreading both

- parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits. Bacon's Natural History.
2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.
- JELLIED. adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.
The kiss that tips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.
- JELLY. n. f. [gelatinum, Latin. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]
1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.
They, distill'd
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the gelly.
The desert came on, and jellies brought. King.
That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;
Pray dip your whiskers. Pope's Sat. of Horace.
- JENNETING. n. f. [corrupted from juneting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- JENNET. n. f. [See GENNET.] A Spanish horse.
The Spanish king presents a jennet,
To shew his love. Prior.
- TO JEOPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.
He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac. xiv. 38.
- JEOPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.
- JEOPARDY. n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in use.
And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy. Hubbard's Tale.
Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakespeare's K. John.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.
- TO JERK. v. a. [gepeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written jerk.
I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakespeare's Othello.
Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerk
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.
- TO JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.
Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.
- JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly Glanv.
Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.
- JERKEN. n. f. [cynzelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.
A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shak.
Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? More's Antidote against Atheism.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South's Sermons.
Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a ferkin. Hudibras, p. ii.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.
- JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth. This should be written gyrkin.
- JERSEY. n. f. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.
- JESS. n. f. [gette, French; getto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hammer.

- If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jeffes were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.
- JE'SSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.
Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jeffamines. Spenser.
- JERU'SALEM Artichokes. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.
Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To JEST. v. n. [gesticulator, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.
Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced.
Ecclus. viii. 4.
- Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.
But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.
As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon's Essays.
No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break *jest*s upon them. Tillotson's Sermons.
He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.
  2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak. Mer. W. of Windsor.
  3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare. R. III.
When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew's Cosmol.
- JE'STER. n. f. [from jest.]
1. One given to merriment and pranks:
The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
  2. One given to sarcasm.
Now, as a *jest*er, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.
  3. Buffoon; jackpudding.
Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.
- JET. n. f. [gagaz, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]
1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommend jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.
Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a set
Of seed-pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.
Under flowing jet,
Of sunny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.
  2. [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.
Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end.
Blackmore's Creation.
Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
  3. A yard. Obsolete.
What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet. Tusser's Husbandry.
- To JET. v. n. [jetter, French.]
1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.
Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare. Tit. Andr.

J E W

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
  3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]
Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wifem.
- JE'TSAM. } n. f. [jetter, French.] Goods or other things JE'TSON. } which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.
- JE'TTY. adj. [from jet.]
1. Made of jet.
  2. Black as jet.
The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior:
Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope's Dunciad.
- JE'WEL. n. f. [joyaux, French; jeweelen, Dutch.]
1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.
Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakesf.
They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakesf.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.
  2. A precious stone; a gem.
Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones;
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.
  3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.
Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are repositied.
The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
- JE'WELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.
These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.
The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.
I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.
- JEWS-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear.
Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians; but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a de-coction of it in milk. Hill's Mat. Med.
An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.
- JEWS-MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.]
The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the pointal of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.
- JEWS-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the cla-vated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky rediness.
It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or a marly very hard earth. It is diuretick; but has been falsely recommended as a lithonriptick. Hill's Mat. Med.
- JEWS-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring

IGN

spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

IF. conjunction. [ȝif, Saxon.]

1. Suppose that; allowing that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker, Preface.

If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs;

I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You, reverend father, and these noble lords,

Had not been here.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.

—If! talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shak.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, he makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition; which amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson's Sermons, Preface.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxim to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,

Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care.

Pope's Statius.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;

But by this easy rise they all advance.

Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:

It can't—it may be—and it must;

To which of these must Alma trust?

Nay, further yet they make her go,

In doubting if she doubts or no.

Prior.

3. Though I doubt whether; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Firey; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanv. Scept. c. 20.

IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Presiding over fire. Pope's Homer.

IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lanthorn.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton's Opt.

TO IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Museum.

IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, French; from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IGNIVOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanos and ignivomous mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derham's Physico-Theology.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignoble, ignobilis, Latin.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,

Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;

Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shak. Rich. III.

IGNOBLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives

Religious, titled them the sons of God,

Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignobly!

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Here, over-match'd in fight, in heaps they lie;

There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden's Æn.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [ignominieux, French; ignominiosus, Lat. from ignominy.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd,

Fled ignominious.

Milton.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,

And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryden's Juven.

They gave, and she transferr'd the curs'd advice,

That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;

By ignominious arts, for servile ends,

Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

IGN

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South's Sermons.

IGNOMINY. n. f. [ignominie, Fr. ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n;

Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare, H. IV.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,

Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,

Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they dislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstruced pretender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South's Sermons.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unskillfulness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker, b. v.

Ignorance is the curse of God,

Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length

Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation

That won you without blows! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If he have power,

Then veil your ignorance; if none, awake

Your dangerous lenity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If we see right, we see our woes;

Then what avails it to have eyes?

From ignorance our comfort flows,

The only wretched are the wise!

Prior.

2. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, French; ignorans, Latin.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Pf. lxxiii. 22.

Thy letters have transported me beyond

This ignorant present time, and I feel now

The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In such business

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson's Sermons.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,

And men, once ignorant, are slaves.

Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge

Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not

In ignorant concealment. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon's Essays.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I

Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne

My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame.

Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done.

His shipping,

Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas

Like egg-shells mov'd.

Shakespeare.

IGNORANT. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.

Did I for this take pains to teach

Our zealous ignorants to preach!

Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskillfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,

Are those whom you would ignorantly save.

Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, mirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

TO IGNO'RE. v. a. [ignorere, French; ignoro, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNO'SCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon. Diet.

JIG n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,

Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben. Johnson.

All the swains that there abide,

With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.

The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting

Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminsterhall. Arbuthnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,

Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.

TO JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

As for the jigging part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

JIGGUMBOB. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs

Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras, p. iii.

JILT. n. f. [gilia, Islandick, to intrap in an amour. Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him:

Avoid both courts and camps,

Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt

With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,

To throw herself away on fools. Orway's Orphan.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,

Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

TO JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;

And who is jilted for another's sake: Dryden's Juvenal.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,

Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

TO J'INGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink; to sound correspondently.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shak.

With noises

Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,

We were awak'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;

And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,

In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

J'INGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Correspondent sounds.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

2. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.

ILE. n. f. [corrupted from aisle, French.] A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aisle.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,

And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

ILE. n. f. [aisle, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

ILE'US. n. f. [Latin.]

The consequences of inflammation is an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts; but is really either a circumvolution, or insertion of one part of the gut within the other.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

I'LEX. n. f. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as if it were painted, and is useful for stocks of tools, mallet-heads, chairs, axle-trees, wedges, beetles, pins, and pallisadoes for fortifications, being very hard and durable. Mortimer.

ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

I'LIAC Passion. n. f. A kind of nervous cholick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

ILK. adv. [ealc, Saxon.] Eke; also. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each: as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same.

Shepherds, should it not yshend

Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse

Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,

That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

There's some ill planet reigns;

I must be patient, 'till the heavens look

With an aspect more favourable. Shakesf. Winter's Tale.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave

The clergy ill example. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill feat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy season;

For I am on the sudden something ill. Shakesf. Henry IV.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL. n. f.

1. Wickedness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;

But are compell'd to avarice alone:

For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juv.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,

Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden's Aureng.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,

Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate's Juvenal.

Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,

Yet never let the noble mind despair;

When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,

The gods their timely succour interpose;

And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,

By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train

The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily.

Thou desir'st

The punishment all on thyself! alas!

Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain

His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,

And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,

When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.

ILL, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

ILL. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds. Shak. Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul:

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

No look, no last adieu before he went!

In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryd. Æn.

I know

The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Phillips.

He may strew

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift's Examiner.

Your

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threat'ning cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me and tell to them my secret. Milt. Agon.
A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope's Odyssey.

ILL. adverb.
There founded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd. xviii. 10.
My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. Ben. Jonns. Catil.
The danger of the day's but newly gone,
And the examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeching arms. Shakesp. H. IV.
Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd. K. Arthur.
We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry saucy ill bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows
her. Sidney, b. ii.
Envy, how carefully does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits.
Collier on Envy.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakesp. Macb.
To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.
The second daughter was a peevish, froward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick vests, which, through their shady fold, Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryd. Virg. Geor.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill ey'd unto you. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison's Cato.
Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.
Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.
Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.
Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney, b. ii.
O, what a world of vile ill favour'd faults
Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year! Shakesp.
If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.
I was at her house the hour she appointed.
—And you sped, sir?
—Very ill favouredly. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
He shook him ill favouredly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all whereso-ever he came. Howel's Vocal Forrest.
They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.
The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryd. Juven.
Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself. Addis. Cato.
Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private and the publick rest. Waller.
That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill
grounded. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.
Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.
Nor has he erred above once by an ill judged superfluity.
Garth's Ovid.
Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexitus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney, b. ii.
The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.
He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.
These are the product
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milt. Parad. Lost.
It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cotager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.
Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.
The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.
When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.
For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.
There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and families unlike. Pope's Dunciad.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.
I shall direct you better, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.
Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the confi-deration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.
Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
The conscious fire the dawning blush survey'd,
And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope's Odyssey.
Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate. Dryden.
The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul.
Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sort'd:
whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.
It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.
Ill spirited Worcester, did we not send grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakesp. H. IV.
From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.
Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope's Odyssey.
Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden's Ovid.
How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.
That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their play-fellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, before words beginning with l, stands for in.
ILLA'CHRYMABLE. adj. [illachrymabilis, Latin.] Incapable of weeping. Dict.
ILLA'PSE. n. f. [illapsus, Latin.]
1. Gradual immission or entrance of one thing into another.
As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the illapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.
2. Sudden attack; casual coming.
Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLA'QUEATE. v. a. [illaqueo, Latin.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

I am illaquated, but not truly captivated into an assent to your conclusion. More's Divine Dialogues.

ILLAQUEA'TION. n. f. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Mathew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. A snare; any thing to catch.

ILLA'TION. n. f. [illatio, Latin.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

ILLATIVE. adj. [illatus, Latin.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

In common discourse or writing such causal particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and therefore. Watts.

ILLA'UDABLE. adj. [illaudabilis, Latin.] Unworthy of praise or commendation.

Strength from truth divided and from just,

Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton's Par. Lost.

ILLA'UDABLY. adv. [from illaudable.] Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not illaudably, too favourable a judgment of their own country. Broome.

ILLE'GAL. adj. [in and legalis, Latin.] Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILLEGALITY. n. f. [from illegal.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed, of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings by virtue of them. Clarendon.

ILLE'GALLY. adv. [from illegal.] In a manner contrary to law.

ILLE'GIBLE. adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Latin.] What cannot be read.

1. Not noble; not ingenuous.

The charity of most men is grown so cold, and their religion so illiberal. King Charles.

2. Not munificent; not generous; sparing.

Yet subsist they did, and well too: an argument that that earth did not deal out their nourishment with an oversparing or illiberal hand. Woodward's Natural History.

ILLIBERALITY. n. f. [illiberalitas, Lat. from illiberal.] Parsimony; niggardliness; want of munificence.

The illiberality of parents, in allowance towards their children, is an harmful error, and acquaints them with shifts. Bac.

ILLIBERALLY. adv. [from illiberal.] Disingenuously; meanly.

One that had been bountiful only upon surprize and incontinency, illiberally retracts. Decay of Piety.

ILLI'CIT. adj. [illicitus, Latin; illicite, French.] Unlawful.

To ILLI'GHTEN. v. n. [in and lighten.] To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Raleigh.

Corporeal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor diaphanous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illightened. Raleigh.

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limes, Latin.] That which cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the subtiler heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idolatry direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown's Vu. Err.

With what an awful world-revolving power,

Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along

The illimitable void!

Thomson's Summer.

ILLI'MITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITED. adj. [in and limes, Latin; illimité, French.] Unbounded; interminable.

ILLITERATE. adj. [iliteratus, Latin.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Watson.

Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies

To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:

The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,

Studies with care th' anatomy of man;

Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,

And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first ages of Christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson's Sermons.

ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day, which immediately preceded this illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury's Sermons.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent behaviour of the faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of all power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great;

Art not without ambition; but without

The illness should attend it.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South's Sermons.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or goodwill; mischievous.

These ill qualities denominate a person illnatured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South's Sermons.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnatur'd task refuse;

Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison's Ovid.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Phillips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase,

Rich foreign mold on their illnatur'd land

Induce.

Phillips.

ILLO'GICAL. adj. [in and logical.]

1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderson so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Walton.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason.

Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Decay of Piety.

ILLOGICALLY. adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

To

To ILLU'DE. v. a. [illudo, Latin.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed of this blow, t' illude him with such bait. F. Qu.
In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
While its circumference, scorning to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Pri.

To ILLU'ME. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When yon same star, that's westward from the pole,
Had made his course t' illumine that part of heav'n,
Where now it burns. Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow,
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach Betoken. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLU'MINE. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

To confirm his words, out flew
Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze
Far round illumin'd hell. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
What in me is dark,
Illumine! what is low, raise and support! Milt. Par. Lost.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

To ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminer, French; lumen, Latin.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
T' illuminate my dim and dulled eyn. Spenser.
No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Wotton.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heav'n,
T' illuminate the earth and rule the night. Milt. Par. Lost.
Reason our guide, what can she more reply
Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandys's Travels.
When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts.

ILLUMINA'TION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illightened, and an illumination created. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryden's Pers.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work.
Felton on the Classics.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayers imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses. Bacon.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Spratt's Sermons.

ILLU'MINATIVE. adj. [illuminatif, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby on Bodies.

ILLUMINA'TOR. n. f. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton.

ILLU'SION. n. f. [illusio, Latin; illusion, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, distill'd by magick flights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakesp. Macbeth.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion. Bacon's Henry VII.

So oft they fell

Into the same illusion; not as man,
Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.
An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illu- sion. Atterbury's Sermons.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their title to salvation.

Rogers's Sermons.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;

Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLU'SIVE. adj. [from illusus, Latin.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackmore.

While the fond soul,

Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson's Spring.

ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and luforius, Latin; illusoire, Fr.]
Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtily, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illu- sory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

To ILLU'STRATE. v. n. [illustro, Latin; illustrer, Fr.]

1. To brighten with light.

2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate

Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r

Giv'n me to quell their pride. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thee she enroll'd her garter'd knights among,

Illustrating the noble list. Phillips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

They take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or really false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLU'STRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.

ILLU'STRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ILLU'STRIOUS. adj. [illustris, Latin; illustre, Fr.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South's Sermons.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name,

Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryden's Juven.

ILLU'STRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdain'd not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterb. Sermons.

Enjoy the glory to be great no more;

And carrying with you all the world can boast,

To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope's Spring.

ILLU'STRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

I'M. Contracted from I am.

IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters.

IMAGE. n. f. [image, French; imago, Latin.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Mat. xxii. 20.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking. Shakesp.

Thy brother I,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shakesp. Tit. And.
The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South's Sermons.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;

But your late brother did not prize me less,

Because I could not boast of images. Dryd. Tyrann. Love.

2. An idol; a false god.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,

To bear his image and renew his glories! Shakesp. Hen. VI.

I have

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images :
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakefp. R. III.

The image of the jest

I'll shew you here at large. Shakefp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

He made us to his image all agree;
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

To IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy;
to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind

How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

If fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut.

An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.

When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Show; appearance.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

3. Copies of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South's Sermons.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imagent, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imagine.]

1. Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,

Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakefp.

Expectation whirls me round:

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,

That it enchants my sense. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History of the World.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,

Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French, from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanv. Scept.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly

The sight of this so horrid spectacle,

Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!

For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton's Agonistes.

His imaginings were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

Where beams of warm imagination play,

The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginings; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidn.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,

An outward honour for an inward toil;

And, for unfelt imaginings,

They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakefp. R. III.

Better I were distract,

So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;

And woes, by wrong imaginings, lose

The knowledge of themselves. Shakefp. King Lear.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imagina- tions against me. Lam. iii. 60.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastick;
full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Natural History.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastic part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imagine, French; imaginor, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakespeare.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakefp. Macbeth.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Pf. xxi. 11.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imagine, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon's Natural History.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker, b. iv.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,

And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakespeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin; imbibere, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, for-asmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes

Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.

Swift.
Illumin'd

Illumin'd wide,

The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun, Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbuthnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, French, from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transiſion, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon's Natural History.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeholder.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South's Sermons.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBODY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter.

An opening cloud reveals

An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd

With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialised spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanv. Sceps.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.

I by vow am so embodied yours,

That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.

Never since created, man

Met such embodied force, as nam'd with these,

Could merit more than that small infantry

Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Under their head embody'd all in one. Milt. Par. Lost.

Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band

Of troops embodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden's Æn.

4. To inclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral embodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBODY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,

Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose

The divine property of her first being. Milton.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOIL. v. n. [from boil.] To exesuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron.

With whose reproach and odious menace,

The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,

Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace

His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:

Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shak. Timon.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakesf. Merry Wives of Windsor.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden's Æn.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,

By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son. Milton's Par. Lost.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,

And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late embosom'd guest,

Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurs'd. Sidney.

Who glad t' embosom his affection vile,

Did all the might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOUND. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,

Which was embounded in this beautiful clay. Shak. K. John.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,

Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference:

they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the studious cloister's pale,

And love the high embowed roof,

With antic pillar massy proof. Milton.

IMBO'WMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Natural History.

To IMBO'WER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,

In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBRANGLE. v. a. To intangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats

They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;

In which, when once they are imbrangled,

The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBROWN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken;

to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote

The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade

Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The walking crew,

At thy request, support the miry shoe;

The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,

And in thy pocket glingling half-pence sound. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear

Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed

Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,

And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.

There streams a spring of blood so fast

From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face

Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel's Civil War.

The merciless Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles's History of the Turks.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,

Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,

That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,

Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

These, where two ways in equal parts divide,

The direful monster from afar descry'd,

Two bleeding babes depending at her side;

Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,

And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Ægyptus' veins imbru'd;

The murder' fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue

The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended

With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd

Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,

This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton's Par. Lost.

To IMBRUTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,

Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose

The divine property of her first being. Milton.

TO IMBU'E. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanted in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Cloaths which have once been thoroughly embued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodw.

TO IMBU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money.

This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilis, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh's History of the World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayw.

2. Possible to be imitated.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

TO IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muckets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would carefs some stableman of note,

And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,

And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden's Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode!

Gay.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestic for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.] Inclined to copy.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,

Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [imitator, Latin; imitateur, French.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dry.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Latin; immaculé, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shakespeare.

The king, whom catholicks count a faint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure

From other guilts as that, heav'n did not hold

One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid. Improper.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,

From whence this stream, through muddy passages,

Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shakesf. Rich. II.

TO IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou can'st not touch the freedom of my mind

With all thy charms, although this corporal rind

Thou hast immanacled.

Milton.

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanv. Scep.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMA'NIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMANITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,

That such immanity and bloody strife

Should reign among professors of one faith. Shakesf. H. VI.

IMMARCES'SIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Diæ.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My powers are unfit,

Myself immartial.

Chapman's Odyssey.

TO IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterial, Fr. in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,

Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;

So hath she not a body of her own,

But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIALITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays, do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterIALIZED spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanv. Scep.

IMMATERIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; without body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateriate, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immateriate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel; for it was grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,

For partial favour, and permitted hate:

Let now your immature dissension cease,

Sit quiet.

Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. n. f. [from immature.] Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glanv.

IMMEASURABILITY. n. f. [immeabilis, Latin.] Want of power to pass.

From this phlegm proceeds white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeasurability of the juices. Arbuthnot.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From

I M M

From the shore

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss, Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milt. Par. Lost.

Immeasurable strength they might behold

In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milt. Agonist.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether? Addison's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,

Nor oars to cut th' immeasurable way. Pope's Odyssey.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely;
beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead. Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd

Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey. Milt. Pa. Lost.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cheyne.

IMME'DIACY. n. f. [immediateté, French, from immediate.] Immediacy.
Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar I believe to Shakespeare.

He led our pow'rs,

Bore the commission of my place and person;

The which immediacy may well stand up,

And call itself your brother. Shakesp. King Lear.

IMME'DIATE. adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief

Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,

But find supply immediate. Shakesp. Timon.

Death denounc'd that day,

Which he presumes already vain, and void,

Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,

By some immediate stroke. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But she, howe'er of vict'ry sure,

Contemns the wreath too long delay'd;

And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,

Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMME'DIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South's Sermons.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip

Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton

Immediately to marry. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

IMME'DIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]

1. Presence with regard to time.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMME'DICABLE. adj. [immediabilis, Latin.] Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,

Nor less than wounds immedicable,

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

IMME'MORABLE. adj. [immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South's Sermons.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, Fr. immensus, Lat.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!

That all this good of evil shall produce! Milt. Parad. Lost.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew's Cosmol.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass. Bentley's Sermons.

I M M

IMMENSITY. n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabrick, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,

And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,

Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,

Are suns, are centers.

Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

TO IMMERGE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

IMMERSE. adj. [immersus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bac.

TO IMMERSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood

More than a mile immers'd within the wood;

At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodw. Nat. History.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyment of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is impossible for a man to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this.

Atterbury's Sermons.

IMMERSION. n. f. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

There are many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; and yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addis.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immethodical.] Without method.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. A word not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;

But dare all imminence, that gods and men

Address their dangers in. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, Fr. imminens, Lat.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day

You have defended me from imminent death. Shakesp. H. VI.

These she applies for warnings and portents

Of evils imminent; and on her knee

Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakespeare.

To them preach'd

Conversion and repentance, as to souls

In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton's Par. Lost.

Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

TO IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.] To mingle; to mix;
to unite.

Some

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain

This holy calm, this harmony of mind,

Where purity and peace imingle charms. Thomf. Summer.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from imminuo, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. f. [from immiscible.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarissa.

IMMISSION. n. f. [immissio, Latin.] The act of sending in; contrary to emission.

TO IMMIT. v. n. [immitto, Latin.] To send in.

TO IMMIX. v. a. [in and mix.] To mingle.

Samson, with these immixt, inevitably

Pull'd down the same destruction on himself. Milton.

IMMIXABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impossible to be mingled.

Fill a glass sphere with such liquors as may be clear, of the same colour, and immixable. Wilkins.

IMMOBILITY. n. f. [immobilité, French, from immobilis, Latin.] Unmoveableness; want of motion; resistance to motion.

The course of fluids through the vascular solids must in time harden the fibres, and abolish many of the canals; from whence driness, weakness, immobility, and debility of the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

IMMODERATE. adj. [immodéré, Fr. immoderatus, Latin.] Excessive; exceeding the due mean.

One means, very effectual for the preservation of health, is a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray on the Creation.

IMMODERATELY. adv. [from immoderate.] In an excessive degree.

Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death. Shakespeare.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, drying it immoderately, and chapping it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

IMMODERATION. n. f. [immoderation, Fr. from immoderate.] Want of moderation; excess.

IMMODEST. adj. [immodeste, French; in and modest.]

1. Wanting shame; wanting delicacy or chastity.

She rail'd at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her. Shakespeare.

2. Unchaste; impure.

Immodest deeds you hinder to be wrought;

But we proscribe the least immodest thought. Dryden.

3. Obscene.

'Tis needful that the most immodest word

Be look'd upon, and learn'd; which once attain'd,
Comes to no farther use

But to be known and hated. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. Unreasonable; exorbitant; arrogant.

IMMODESTY. n. f. [immodestie, French, from immodest.] Want of modesty; indecency.

It was a piece of immodesty. Pope.

TO IMMOLATE. v. a. [immolo, Latin; immoler, French.] To sacrifice; to kill in sacrifice.

These courtiers of applause being oftentimes reduced to live in want, these costly trifles so ingrossing all that they can spare, that they frequently enough are forced to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Now immolate the tongues, and mix the wine,

Sacred to Neptune and the powers divine. Pope's Odyssey.

IMMOLATION. n. f. [immolation, French, from immolate.]

1. The act of sacrificing.

In the picture of the immolation of Isaac, or Abraham sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy. Brown.

2. A sacrifice offered.

We make more barbarous immolations than the most savage heathens. Decay of Piety.

IMMOMENT. adj. [in and moment.] Trifling; of no importance or value. A barbarous word.

I some lady-trifles have reserv'd,

Immoment toys, things of such dignity

As we greet modern friends withal. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

IMMORAL. adj. [in and moral.] Wanting regard to the laws of natural religion; contrary to honesty; dishonest.

IMMORALITY. n. f. [from immoral.] Dishonesty; want of virtue; contrariety to virtue.

Such men are put into the commission of the peace who encourage the grossest immoralities, to whom all the bawds of the ward pay contribution. Swift.

IMMORTAL. adj. [immortalis, Latin.]

1. Exempt from death; never to die.

To the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wife
God, be glory for ever. Tim. i. 17.

Her body sleeps in Capulet's monument,

And her immortal part with angels lives. Shak. Ro. and Jul.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot's Description of the World.

The Paphian queen,

With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,

Like terror did among th' immortals breed,

Taught by her wound that goddesses may bleed. Waller.

2. Never ending; perpetual.

Give me my robe, put on my crown: I have

Immortal longings in me. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

IMMORTALITY. n. f. [immortalité, Fr. from immortal.] Exemption from death; life never to end.

This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality. Corinth.

Quaff immortality and joy. Milton.

He th' immortality of souls proclaim'd,

Whom th' oracle of men the wisest nam'd. Denham.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God, and the nature of his immortality. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMORTALLY. adv. [from the adjective.] So as never to die.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. a. [immortaliser, French, from immortal.]

To make immortal; to perpetuate; to exempt from death.

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd. Shakesp.

For mortal things desire their like to breed,

That so they may their kind immortalize. Davies.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. n. To become immortal. This word is, I think, peculiar to Pope.

Fix the year precise,

When British bards begin t' immortalize. Pope.

IMMORTALLY. adv. [from immortal.] With exemption from death; without end.

There is your crown;

And he that wears the crown immortally,

Long guard it yours! Shakesp. Henry IV.

What pity 'tis that he cannot wallow immortally in his sensual pleasures! Bentley's Sermons.

IMMOVABLE. adj. [in and moveable.]

1. Not to be forced from its place.

We shall not question his removing the earth, when he finds an immovable base to place his engine upon. Brown.

2. Not liable to be carried away; real in law.

When an executor meddles with the immovable estate, before he has seized on the moveable goods, it may be then appealed from the execution of sentence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Unshaken; unaffected.

How much happier is he, who, centring on himself, remains immovable, and smiles at the madness of the dance about him! Dryden's Don Sebastian.

IMMOVABLY. adv. [from immovable.] In a state not to be shaken.

Immovably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward. Atterbury's Sermons.

IMMUNITY. n. f. [immunité, French; immunitas, Latin.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.

Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness. Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Sidney.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. Mac. xiii. 34.

The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Sprat's Sermons.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But this annex'd condition of the crown,

Immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.

TO IMMURE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emmurer, old French, so that it might be written emmure.] To inclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,

Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Shak. R. III.

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;

And shall I think in silver she's immur'd? Shakespeare.

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

Lyfimachus immured it with a wall. Sandys's Travels.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure

On earth, she, when escap'd, is wise and pure. Denham.

IMMURE. n. f. [from the verb.] A wall; an inclosure, as in Shakespeare.

Their vow is made

To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures

The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,

With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakespeare.

IMMUSICAL.

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Unmusical; inharmonious.

All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings. Bacon's Natural History.

When we consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of, we cannot consent. Brown.

IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilité, Fr. from immutable.] Exemption from change; invariableness; unchangeableness.

The immortality of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immortality of God. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

IMMUTABLE. adj. [immutabilis, Latin.] Unchangeable; invariable; unalterable.

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we have a strong consolation. Heb. vi.

Thy threat'nings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
But if immutable and fix'd they stand,

Continue still thyself to give the stroke,

And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.

IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutable.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.

His love is like his essence, immutably eternal. Boyle.

IMP. n. f. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a sprig.]

1. A son; the offspring; progeny.

That noble imp your son. Lord Cromwel to King Henry.

And thou, most dreaded imp of highest Jove,

Fair Venus' son. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The tender imp was weaned from the teat. Fairfax.

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense 'tis still retained.

Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hook.

Him after long debate, irresolute

Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom

To enter, and his dark suggestions hide

From sharpest sight. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

As soon as you can hear his knell,

This god on earth turns d——l in hell;

And, lo! his ministers of state,

Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.

To IMP. v. a. [impio, to engraff, Welsh.] To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,

Imp out our drooping country's broken wings. Shak. R. II.

New rebellions raise

Their hydra heads, and the false North displays

Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

Help, ye tart satyrists, to imp my rage

With all the scorpions that should whip this age. Cleavel.

With cord and canvas from rich Hamburgh sent,

His navy's molted wings he imps once more. Dryden.

New creatures rise,

A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;

'Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,

The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings

Impt for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southern.

To IMPACT. v. a. [impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together. Woodward on Fossils.

To IMPAIN. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want

Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shakesp. H. VI.

To IMPAIR. v. a. [empirer, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.

Objects divine

Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milt. Pa. Lost.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd

What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,

Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,

But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

To IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. F. 2.

IMPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by site than dust of steel. Brown.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

IMPA'LPABLE. adj. [impalpable, Fr. in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

To IMPA'RADISE. v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney, b. ii.

All my souls be

Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone

I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.

Thus these two,

Imparadis'd in one another's arms,

The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill

Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPA'RITY. n. f. [imparitas, impar, Latin.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in mens names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To IMPA'RK. v. a. [in and park.] To inclose with a park; to sever from a common.

To IMPA'RT. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,

But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To communicate.

Gentle lady,

When first I did impart my love to you,

I freely told you, all the wealth I had

Ran in my veins. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts

Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont t' impart. Milt. P. L.

I find thee knowing of thyself;

Expressing well the spirit within thee free,

My image, not imparted to the brute. Milt. Par. Lost.

IMPA'RTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:

Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;

Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden's Æn.

IMPA'RTIALITY. [n. f. [impartialité, French; from impartial.] Equitableness; justice.

A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South's Sermons.

IMPA'RTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South's Sermons.

IMPA'RTIBLE. adj. [impartible, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPA'SSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.

Over this gulf

Impassable, impervious; let us try,

To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand.

Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

IMPA'SSIBLE. adj. [impassible, Fr. in and passiv, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour.

Hammond.

Secure of death, I should contemn thy dart,

Though naked, and impassible depart.

Dryden.

IMPA'SSIBLENESS. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibility of the next?

Decay of Piety.

IMPA'SSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Seized with passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,

The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began.

Milt. Par. Lost.

IMPA'SSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantoms were,

Forms without bodies, and impassive air.

Dryden's Æn.

Pale funs, unfelt at distance, roll away;

And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play.

Pope.

IMPA'STED. adj. [in and paste.] Covered as with paste.

Horridly trickt

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,

Bak'd and impass'd with the parching fires.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

IMPA'TIENCE. n. f. [impatience, Fr. impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

The experiment I resolv'd to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience.

Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPA'TIENT. adj. [impatient, Fr. impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays

Not more by envy than excess of praise.

Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,

And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound.

Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him.

Addison's Spectator.

4. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,

Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r.

Dry.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;

Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands.

Pope's Odyssey.

IMPA'TIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. Passionately; ardently.

He consider'd one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration.

Clarendon.

2. Eagerly; with great desire.

To IMPA'TRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.]

To gain to one's self the power of any seignior. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy.

Bacon's Henry VII.

To IMPA'WN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd

Some surety for a safe return again.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

Many now in health

Shall drop their blood, in approbation

Of what your reverence shall invite us to;

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake our sleeping sword of war.

Shakesp. H. V.

To IMPE'ACH. v. a. [empecher, French.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach;

There was no bar to stop, nor foe him to impeach.

Fairy Queen.

These ungracious practices of his sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

Hayward.

A defluxion on my throat impeached my utterance.

Howel.

2. To accuse by publick authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.

Addison.

Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached.

Swift.

IMPE'ACH. n. f. [from the verb.] Hindrance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this?

If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

Shakespeare.

IMPEA'CHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.

Grew's Cosmol.

IMPE'ACHER. n. f. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.

Gov. of the Tongue.

IMPE'ACHMENT. n. f. [from impeach.]

1. Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof.

Spenser on Ireland.

Turn thee back,

And tell thy king I do not seek him now;

But could be willing to march on to Calais,

Without impeachment.

Shakesp. Henry V.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to Christian liberty, or ensnaring of mens consciences.

Sanderf.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,

Devis'd impeachments to imprison him.

Shak. Rich. III.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution.

Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.

Swift.

To IMPE'ARL. v. a. [in and pearl.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,

Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun

Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r.

Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dews of the morning impearl every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth.

Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABI'LITY. n. f. [impeccabilité, Fr. from impeccable.]

Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

Pope.

IMPE'CCABLE. adj. [impeccable, French; in and pecco, Latin.]

Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

To IMPE'DE. v. a. [impedio, Latin.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede its passage.

Decay of Piety.

The way is open, and no stop to force

The stars return, or to impede their course.

Creech.

IMPE'DIMENT. n. f. [impedimentum, Latin.] Hindrance; let; impeachment; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

Hooker.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech.

Mar. vii. 32.

But for my tears,

The moist impediments unto my speech,

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke.

Shakesp. H. IV.

May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,

Dream of impediment.

Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Free from th' impediments of light and noise,

Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

Waller.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMPE'L. v. a. [impello, Latin.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,

Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide.

Dryden's Ovid.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast.

Pope.

Propitious gales

Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.

Pope's Odyssey.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,

And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

Pope.

IMPE'LLENT. n. f. [impellens, Latin.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

I M P

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

TO IMPE'ND. v. n. [impendo, Lat.] To hang over; to be at hand; to press nearly.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath. Smairidge's Sermons.

Destruction sure o'er all your heads impends;

Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends. Pope's Odyssey.

No story I unfold of publick woes,

Nor bear advices of impending foes. Pope's Odyssey.

IMPE'NDENT. adj. [impendens, Latin.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rules the appetite to averfation. Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain

Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air

Let his keen fabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.

IMPE'NDENCE. n. f. [from impendent.] The state of hanging over; near approach.

Though it be good, yet sometimes it is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impudence of a greater sensible evil. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPENETRABILITY. n. f. [impenetrabilité, Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton's Opt.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impresson.

IMPE'NETRABLE. adj. [impenetrable, Fr. impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,

The cyclops did their strokes repeat,

Before th' impenetrable shield was wrought. Dryden.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,

Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cur

That ever kept with men.

—Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers. Shakespeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel. Taylor.

IMPE'NETRABLY. adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impresson.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull

Of solid proof, impenetrably dull. Pope's Dunciad.

IMPE'NITENCE. } n. f. [impenitence, Fr. in and penitence.] Ob-

IMPE'NITENCY. } duracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South's Sermons.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excuseable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson's Sermons.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, 'till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers's Sermons.

IMPE'NITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent mens requests; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.

They dy'd

Impenitent, and left a race behind

Like to themselves. Milton.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPE'NITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hamm.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,

In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,

Still run on poets! Pope.

IMPE'NNOUS. adj. [in and penna, Latin.] Wanting wings. It is generally received an earwigg hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impennoous insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

I M P

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Latin.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South's Sermons.

Those natural and involuntary actings are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mank.

IMPE'RATIVE. adj. [imperatif, Fr. imperativus, Latin.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

IMPERCE'PTIBLE. adj. [imperceptible, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.

IMPERCE'PTIBLENESS. n. f. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty and imperceptibleness to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCE'PTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprize, and become wiser and better unawares. Add.

IMPE'RFECT. adj. [imparfait, Fr. imperfectus, Latin.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state,

Which, since his coming forth, is thought of,

Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,

That his return was most required. Shakefp.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben. Johnson.

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or incoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

There are divers things we agree to be knowledge by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,

And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good.

IMPERFE'CTION. n. f. [imperfection, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral; whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfection; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many imperfections intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayw.

Imperfections would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfections than virtues. Addison's Spectator.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfection in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPE'RFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away,

Maria's love might justify your stay;

Imperfectly the many vows are paid,

Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

IMPERSONABLE.

IMPERFORABLE. adj. [in and perforo, Latin.] Not to be bored through.

IMPERFORATE. adj. [in and perforatus, Latin.] Not pierced through; without a hole.

IMPERIAL. adj. [imperial, French; imperialis, Latin.]

1. Royal; possessing royalty.

Aim he took

At a fair vestal, throned in the West;
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon,
And the imperial vot'ers pass'd on
In maiden meditation, fancy free.

Shakespeare.

2. Betokening royalty; marking sovereignty.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,

Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,

Derives itself to me.

Shakespeare. Henry IV.

3. Belonging to an emperor or monarch; regal; royal; monarchical.

The main body of the marching foe
Against th' imperial palace is design'd. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

You that are a sov'reign prince, allay

Imperial pow'r with your paternal sway.

Dryden.

To tame the proud, the fetter'd slave to free,

These are imperial arts, and worthy thee. Dryden's Æn.

IMPERIALIST. n. f. [from imperial.] One that belongs to an emperor.

The imperialists imputed the cause of so shameful a flight unto the Venetians. Knolles's History of the Turks.

IMPERIOUS. adj. [imperieux, French; imperiōsus, Latin.]

1. Commanding; tyrannical; authoritative; haughty; arrogant; assuming command.

If it be your proud will

To shew the power of your imperious eyes.

Spenser.

This imperious man will work us all

From princes into pages.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Not th' imperious show

Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall

Be brooch'd with me.

Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

He is an imperious dictator of the principles of vice, and impatient of all contradiction. Mere's Divine Dialogues.

How much I suffer'd, and how long I strove

Against th' assaults of this imperious love!

Dryden.

Recollect what disorder haughty or imperious words from parents or teachers have caused in his thoughts. Locke.

2. Powerful; ascendant; overbearing.

A man, by a vast and imperious mind, and a heart large as the sand upon the sea-shore, could command all the knowledge of nature and art. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMPERIOUSLY. adv. [from imperious.] With arrogance of command; with insolence of authority.

Who's there, that knocketh so imperiously? Shak. H. VI.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, six whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church. Hall.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures an esteem from any one. South.

The sage, transported at th' approaching hour,

Imperiously thrice thunder'd on the floor! Garth's Dispens.

IMPERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from imperious.]

1. Authority; air of command.

So would he use his imperiousness, that we had a delightful fear and awe, which made us loth to lose our hopes. Sidney.

2. Arrogance of command.

Imperiousness and severity is but an ill way of treating men, who have reason of their own to guide them. Locke.

IMPERISHABLE. adj. [imperissable, French; in and perish.] Not to be destroyed.

We find this our empyreal form

Incapable of mortal injury,

Imperishable; and though pierc'd with wound,

Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

IMPERSONAL. adj. [impersonel, French; impersonalis, Lat.]

Not varied according to the persons.

IMPERSONALLY. adv. [from impersonal.] According to the manner of an impersonal verb.

IMPERSUASIBLE. adj. [in and persuasibilis, Latin.] Not to be moved by persuasion.

Every pious person ought to be a Noah, a preacher of righteousness; and if it be his fortune to have as impersuasible an auditory, if he cannot avert the deluge, it will yet be the delivering his own soul, if he cannot benefit other mens.

Decay of Piety.

IMPERTINENCE. } n. f. [impertinence, French; from imper-

IMPERTINENCY. } tinent. }

1. That which is of no present weight; that which has no relation to the matter in hand.

Some tho' they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinencies. Bac.

2. Folly; rambling thought.

O, matter and impertinency mixt,

Reason and madness!

Shakespeare. King Lear.

3. Troublesomeness; intrusion.

It will be said I handle an art no way suitable to my employments or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton's Architecture.

We should avoid the vexation and impertinence of pedants, who affect to talk in a language not to be understood. Swift.

4. Trifle; thing of no value.

I envy your felicity, delivered from the gilded impertinencies of life, to enjoy the moments of a solid contentment. Evelyn.

Nothing is more easy than to represent as impertinencies any parts of learning, that have no immediate relation to the happiness or convenience of mankind. Addison.

There are many subtle impertinencies learnt in the schools, and many painful trifles, even among the mathematical theorems and problems. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

IMPERTINENT. adj. [impertinent, Fr. in and pertinens, Latin.]

1. Of no relation to the matter in hand; of no weight.

The law of angels we cannot judge altogether impertinent unto the affairs of the church of God. Hooker.

The contemplation of things that are impertinent to us, and do not concern us, are but a more specious idleness. Tillotson.

'Tis not a sign two lovers are together, when they can be so impertinent as to enquire what the world does. Pope.

3. Foolish; trifling.

IMPERTINENT. n. f. A trifler; a meddler; an intruder.

Governours would have enough to do to trouble their heads with the politicks of every meddling officious impertinent.

L'Estrange's Fables.

IMPERTINENTLY. adv. [from impertinent.]

1. Without relation to the present matter.

2. Troublesomely; officiously; intrusively.

I have had joy given me as preposterously, and as imperti- nently, as they give it to men who marry where they do not love. Suckling.

The blessedest of mortals, now the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impertinently importuned, that great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Howel.

Why will any man be so impertinently officious as to tell me all this is only fancy? If it is a dream, let me enjoy it. Addis.

IMPERVIOUS. adj. [impervius, Latin.]

1. Unpassable; impenetrable.

We may thence discern of how close a texture glass is, since so very thin a film proved so impervious to the air, that it was forced to break the glass to free itself. Boyle.

Lest the difficulty of passing back

Stay his return, perhaps, over this gulf

Impassable, impervious; let us try

To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

The cause of reflexion is not the impinging of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies. Newton's Opt.

A great many vessels are, in this state, impervious by the fluids. Arbuthnot.

From the damp earth impervious vapours rise,

Increase the darkness, and involve the skies.

Pope.

2. Inaccessible. Perhaps improperly used.

A river's mouth impervious to the wind,

And clear of rocks.

Pope's Odyssey.

IMPETRATION. n. f. [impetration, Fr. impetratio, from impetro, Latin.] The act of obtaining by prayer or intreaty.

The blessed sacrament is the mystery of the death of Christ, and the application of his blood, which was shed for the remission of sins, and is the great means of impetration, and the meritorious cause of it. Taylor.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy, and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

IMPETUOSITY. n. f. [impetuosité, French, from impetuosus.]

1. Violence; fury; vehemence; force.

I will set upon Aguecheck a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

The whole intrigue was contrived by the duke, and so violently pursued by his spirit and impetuosity. Clarendon.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to take their freest range, and act with the utmost impetuosity.

IMPE'TUOUS. adj. [impetueux, Fr. from impetus, Latin.]

1. Violent; forcible; fierce.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood,
Rolling its course, design'd their country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluted weed.

Prior.

2. Vehement; passionate.

The king, 'tis true, is noble, but impetuous.

Rowe.

IMPE'TUOUSLY. adv. [from impetuosus.] Violently; vehemently.

They view the windings of the hoary Nar;
Through rocks and woods impetuously he glides,
While froth and foam the fretting surface hides.

Addison.

IMPE'TUOUSNESS. n. f. [from impetuosus.] Violence; fury.

I wish all words of this sort might vanish in that breath that utters them; that as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might in transiency.

Decay of Piety.

IMPETUS. n. f. [Latin.] Violent tendency to any point; violent effort.

Why did not they continue their descent 'till they were contiguous to the sun, whither both mutual attraction and impetus carried them.

Bentley's Sermons.

IMPIERCEABLE. adj. [in and pierce.] Impenetrable; not to be pierced.

Exceeding rage inflam'd the furious beast;
For never felt his impierceable breast

So wond'rous force from hand of living wight.

Fa. Queen.

IMPIETY. n. f. [impiété, French; impietas, Latin.]

1. Irreverence to the Supreme Being; contempt of the duties of religion.

To keep that oath were more impiety

Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

Shak. H. VI.

2. An act of wickedness; expression of irreligion. In this sense it has a plural.

If they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited.

Shakefp. Hen. V.

Can Juno such impieties approve?

Denham.

We have a melancholy prospect of the state of our religion: such amazing impieties can be equalled by nothing but by those cities consumed of old by fire.

Swift's Examiner.

TO IMPIGNORATE. v. a. [in and pignus, Latin.] To pawn; to pledge.

IMPIGNORATION. n. f. [from impignorare.] The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

TO IMPINGE. v. n. [impingo, Latin.] To fall against; to strike against; to clash with.

Things are reserved in the memory by some corporeal exuvia and material images, which, having impinged on the common sense, rebound thence into some vacant cells of the brain.

Glanville's Scept.

The cause of reflexion is not the impinging of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies.

Newton's Opt.

TO IMPINGUATE. v. a. [in and pinguis, Lat.] To fatten; to make fat.

Frictions also do more fill and impinguate the body than exercise; for that in frictions the inward parts are at rest.

Bacon.

IMPIOUS. adj. [impius, Latin.] Irreligious; wicked; profane; without reverence of religion.

That Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think.

Hooker.

Cease then this impious rage.

Milton.

Ye gods, destroy that impious sex.

Waller.

Then lewd Auchemolus he laid in dust,

Who stain'd his stepdame's bed with impious lust.

IMPLA'CABLE. adj. [implacabilis, Lat. implacable, Fr.] Not to be pacified; inexorable; malicious; constant in enmity.

His incensement is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death.

Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

Darah bears a generous mind;

But to implacable revenge inclin'd;

A bounteous master, but a deadly foe.

Dryden's Aurengz.

The French are the most implacable and the most dangerous enemies of the British nation.

Addison.

IMPLA'CABLY. adv. [from implacabile.]

1. With malice not to be pacified; inexorably.

An order was made for disarming all the papists; upon which though nothing was after done, yet it kept up the apprehensions in the people of dangers, and disinclined them from the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

Clarendon.

2. It is once used by Dryden in a kind of mixed sense of a tyrant's love.

I love,

And 'tis below my greatness to disown it:

Love thee implacably, yet hate thee too.

Dryd. Don Sebast.

2. To put the possessions of the church into the hands of laicks.

Mrs. Gullston being possessed of the impropriate parsonage of Bardwell in Suffolk, did procure from the king leave to annex the same to the vicarage. Spe. man.

IMPROPRIATION. n. f. [from impropriate.]

An impropriation is properly so called when the church land is in the hands of a layman; and an appropriation is when it is in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, though sometimes these terms are confounded. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Having an impropriation in his estate, he took a course to dispose of it for the augmentation of the vicarage. Spe. man.

IMPROPRIATOR. n. f. [from impropriate.] A layman that has the possession of the lands of the church.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tythes to the rector or impropriator. Ayliffe's Parerg.

IMPROPRIETY. n. f. [impropriete, Fr. from improprius, Latin.] Unfitness; unsuitableness; inaccuracy; want of justness.

These mighty ones, whose ambition could suffer them to be called gods, would never be flattered into immortality; but the proudest have been convinced of the impropriety of that appellation. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Many gross improprieties, however authorized by practice, ought to be discarded. Swift.

IMPROSPEROUS. adj. [in and prosperous.] Unhappy; unfortunate; not successful.

This method is in the design probable, how improsperous so ever the wickedness of men hath rendered the success of it. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Our pride seduces us at once into the guilt of bold, and punishment of improsperous rebels. Decay of Piety.

Seven revolving years are wholly run,

Since the improsperous voyage we begun. Dryden's Æn.

IMPROSPEROUSLY. adv. [from improsperous.] Unhappily; unsuccessfully; with ill fortune.

This experiment has been but very improsperously attempted. Boyle.

IMPROVABLE. adj. [from improve.] Capable of being advanced from a good to a better state; capable of melioration.

Adventures in knowledge are laudable, and the essays of weaker heads afford improvable hints unto better. Brown.

We have stock enough, and that too of so improvable a nature, that is, capable of infinite advancement. Decay of Piety.

Man is accommodated with moral principles, improvable by the exercise of his faculties. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Animals are not improvable beyond their proper genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew's Cosmol.

I have a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already planting woods and draining marshes. Addison's Spectator.

IMPROVABLENESS. n. f. [from improvable.] Capableness of being made better.

IMPROVABLY. adv. [from improvable.] In a manner that admits of melioration.

To IMPROVE. v. a. [in and probo, Latin.] Quasi probum facere. Skinner.

1. To advance any thing nearer to perfection; to raise from good to better. We amend a bad, but improve a good thing.

I love not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead. Denham.

Heaven seems improv'd with a superior ray,

And the bright arch reflects a double day. Pope.

2. [In and prove; improver, Fr. improbo, Lat.] To disprove.

Though the prophet Jeremy was unjustly accused, yet doth not that improve any thing that I have said. Whitgift.

I M P

To IMPROVE. v. n. To advance in goodness.

We take care to improve in our frugality and diligence; virtues which become us, particularly in times of war. Atterb.
IMPROVEMENT. n. s. [from improve.]

1. Melioration; advancement of any thing from good to better.
Some virtues tend to the preservation of health, and others to the improvement and security of estates. Tillotson.

2. Act of improving.
The parts of Sinon, Camilla, and some few others, are improvements on the Greek poet. Addison's Spectator.

3. Progress from good to better.
There is a design of publishing the history of architecture, with its several improvements and decays. Addison.

4. Instruction; edification.
I look upon your city as the best place of improvement: from the school we go to the university, but from the universities to London. South.

5. Effect of melioration.
Love is the greatest of human affections, and friendship the noblest and most refined improvement of love. South.

IMPROVER. n. s. [from improve.]
1. One that makes himself or any thing else better.
They were the greatest improvers of those qualifications with which courts used to be adorned. Clarendon.

The first started ideas have been examined, and many effectually confuted by the late improvers of this way. Locke.
Homer is like a skilful improver, who places a beautiful statue so as to answer several vistas. Pope.

2. Any thing that meliorates.
Chalk is a very great improver of moist lands. Mortimer.

IMPROVIDED. adj. [improvisus, Latin; imprevu, Fr.] Unforeseen; unexpected; unprovided against.
She suborned hath

This crafty messenger with letters vain,
To work new woe, and improvided scath,
By breaking off the band betwixt us twain. Fairy Queen.

IMPROVIDENCE. n. s. [from improvident.] Want of forethought; want of caution.
Men would escape floods by running up to mountains; and though some might perish through improvidence, or through the sudden inundation of a deluge, many would escape. Hale.

The improvidence of my neighbour must not make me inhuman. L'Estrange.

IMPROVIDENT. adj. [improvidus, Latin.] Wanting forecast; wanting care to provide.
Improvident soldiers, had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall'n. Shak. H. VI.

When men well have fed, the blood being warm,
Then are they most improvident of harm. Daniel's Ci. War.
I shall conclude this digression, and return to the time when that brisk and improvident resolution was taken. Clarendon.

This were an improvident revenge in the young ones, whereby, in defect of provision, they must destroy themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMPROVIDENTLY. adv. [from improvident.] Without forethought; without care.
Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Improvidently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd, and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty. Donne.

IMPROVISION. n. s. [in and provision.] Want of forethought.
Her improvision would be justly accusable. Brown.

IMPRUDENCE. n. s. [imprudence, Fr. imprudencia, Lat.] Want of prudence; indiscretion; negligence; inattention to interest.

IMPRUDENT. adj. [imprudens, Fr. imprudens, Lat.] Wanting prudence; injudicious; indiscreet; negligent.
There is no such imprudent person as he that neglects God and his soul. Tillotson.

IMPUDENCE. } n. s. [impudence, Fr. impudentia, Lat.] Shame-
IMPUDENCY. } lessness; immodesty.
I ne'er heard yet

That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gain say what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Nor did Noah's open infirmity justify Cham's impudency, or exempt him from that curse of being servant of servants. King Charles.

Those clear truths, that either their own evidence forces us us to admit, or common experience makes it impudence to deny. Locke.

IMPUDENT. adj. [impudent, Fr. impudens, Latin.] Shameless; wanting modesty.
It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sawciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration. Shakesp. Henry IV.

When we behold an angel, not to fear,
Is to be impudent. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

IMPUDENTLY. adv. [from impudent.] Shamelessly; without modesty.
At once assail
With open mouths, and impudently rail. Sandys.

I M P

Why should soft Fabius impudently bear
Names gain'd by conquest in the Gallick war?
Why lays he claim to Hercules his strain,
Yet dares be base, effeminate, and vain? Dryden.
To IMPUGN. v. a. [impugner, Fr. impugno, Lat.] To attack; to assault.

Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law Cannot impugn you. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness; and that not only in matters of moment and business, but also of recreation, which is indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham on Drawing.

IMPUGNER. n. s. [from impugn.] One that attacks or invades.

IMPUISSANCE. n. s. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.
As he would not trust Ferdinando and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impuissance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

IMPULSE. n. s. [impulsus, Latin.]
1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.
If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South's Sermons.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.
Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Ch'yne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea.
Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden's Æn.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dry.
Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.
Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. s. [impulsion, Fr. impulsus, Latin.]
1. The agency of body in motion upon body.
The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.
But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st
Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton's Agonistes.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.
Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion
Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South's Sermons.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. s. [impunité, Fr. impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.
In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never be brought to believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison's Freeholder.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury's Sermons.

IMPURE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]
1. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy.
No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

Hypocrites austere talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

2. Unchaste.

2. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakefp. R. III.
One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

3. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

IMPU'RELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.
IMPU'RENESS. } n. f. [impureté, French; impuritas, Lat. from IMPU'RITY. } impure.]

1. Want of sanctity; want of holiness.

2. Act of unchastity.

The foul impurities that reigned among the monkish clergy.
Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Feculent admixture.

Cleanse the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters, the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbuthnot.
TO IMPURPLE. v. a. [empourprer, Fr. from purple.] To make red; to colour as with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses, smil'd. Milton.

IMPU'TABLE. adj. [from impute.]

1. Chargeable upon any one.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South:

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wife imputable.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

IMPU'TABLENESS. n. f. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPUTATION. n. f. [imputation, Fr. from impute.]

1. Attribution of any thing: generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;

Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd

In this wild action. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandize, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakespeare.

To use intellects and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanv. Sceps.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; reflection.

Antonio is a good man.

—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

IMPUTATIVE. adj. [from impute.] That which may impute. Ainsworth.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, Fr. impute, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Ro. iv. 22.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and pairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon's Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit

Imputed shall absolve them who renounce

Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton.

IMPUTER. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.

IN. prep. [in, Latin.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.
Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel's Civil War.

2. Noting the state present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thiinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakefp.

Sir Edmond Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shak. R. III.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel's Civil War.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Collier.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smalridge's Sermons.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Letter to Publ. of Dunciad.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past, with a prospect of proceeding in such addition with all the infinity of numbers? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed mens souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hubb. Tale.

5. Noting proportion.

Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.

I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.

6. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said in it. Locke.

7. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,

Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed,

That he is grown so great? Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

In the name of the people,

And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you

That I may see your father's death reveng'd. Dryden.

8. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,

Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shakefp. H. VI.

9. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and against my will. Shakespeare's As you like it.

10. In as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.

IN. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falshood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacredest bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South's Sermons.

I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shakespeare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:

We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.

These pragmatistical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estr.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,

Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakefp.

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,

Unless, good man, he has been fairly in. Pope.

4. Noting entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakespeare.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?

—Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in: follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced in at either of those holes. Woodward on Fossils.

5. Into any place.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm. Collier.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryd. Georg.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to inure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and thro' experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INABSTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milt. Par. Lost.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessibile, Fr. in and accessible.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.

Whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakespeare.
Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

There shall we clearly see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of. Ray on the Creation.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.

INACCURACY. n. f. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.
INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

INACTION. n. f. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

INACTIVE. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers's Sermons.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adæquatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADVERTENCE. } n. f. [inadvertance, French; from inad-
INADVERTENCY. } vertent.]

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a vast difference between them; indeed, as vast as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprize and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertence or indiscretion. Government of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.

INADVERTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.

Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Clarissa.

INALIENABLE. adj. [in and alienable.] That cannot be alienated.

INALIMENTAL. adj. [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.

Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.

INAMISSIBLE. adj. [inamissible, French; in and amissum, Lat.] Not to be lost.

These advantages are inamissible. Hammond.

INANE. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void.

We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.

TO INANIMATE. v. a. [in and animo, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. This word is not in use.

There's a kind of world remaining still,
Though she which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light. Donne.

INANIMATE. } adj. [inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.]
INANIMATED. } Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have their spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.

The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.

They can neither subsist nor be produced by the powers of mechanism; for both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimate part of the universe. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.

INANITION. n. f. [inanition, Fr. inanis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.

Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INANITY. n. f. [from inanis, Latin.] Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as no body whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby on Bodies.

INAPPETENCY. n. f. [in and appetentia, Latin.] Want of stomach or appetite.

INARTI'ULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn musick, which is inarticulate poesy, does in churches. Dryden.

INARTI'ULATELY. adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

INARTI'ULATENESS. n. f. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTIFI'CIAL. adj. [in and artificial.] Contrary to art.

I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also. Decay of Piety.

INARTIFI'CIALLY. adv. [from inartificial.] Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when its affected by those of a self-denying profession. Collier.

INATTE'NTION. n. f. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproofs of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect. Rogers's Sermons.

We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect. Rogers's Sermons.

Novel lays attract our ravish'd ears;

But old, the mind with inattention hears. Pope.

INATTE'NTIVE. adj. [in and attentive.] Careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit. Watts.

INAU'DIBLE. adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;

For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time

Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

TO INAU'GURATE. v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

Those beginnings of years were propitious to him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the time as of the will. Wotton.

INAUGURA'TION. n. f. [inauguration, Fr. inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.

The royal olive was solemnly sworn, at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable. Howel's Vocal Forrest.

At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INAURA'TION. n. f. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours. Arbutnot on Coins.

INAUSP'ICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here

I will set up my everlasting rest;

And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars

From this world-wearied flesh. Shakes. Rom. and Juliet.

Though heaven's inauspicious eye

Lay black on love's nativity,

Her eye a strong appeal can give;

Beauty, smiles, and love shall live.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain

Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;

She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair. Dryden.

INBE'ING. n. f. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it. Watts.

INBORN. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by sense of good,

Inborn to all, I fought my needful food.

All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them. Dryden.

Some Carolina, to heaven's dictates true,

Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,

And slight th' imperial diadem for thee. Addison.

INBRE'ATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of syrens, pledges of heav'n's joy,

Sphere-born harmonious sisters, voice and verse,

Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,

Dead things with inbreath'd sense able to pierce. Milton.

INBRED. adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

My inbred enemy

Forth issu'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some esteem for the setting of that inbred affection at work. L'Estr.

But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat;

And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight. Dryden.

TO INCA'GE. v. a. [in and cage.] To coop up; to shut up; to confine in a cage, or any narrow space.

And yet incaged in so small a verge,

Thy waste is no whit lesser than thy lord's. Shakes. R. II.

It made my imprisonment a pleasure;

Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds

Conceive.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

INCALE'SCENCE. } n. f. [incalesco, Latin.] The state of grow-INCALE'SCENCY. } ing warm; warmth; incipient heat.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, making no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence, and regulated estuation from wine. Brown.

The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incalescency, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion. Ray on the Creation.

INCANTA'TION. n. f. [incantation, Fr. incanto, Lat.] Charms uttered by fingering; enchantment.

My ancient incantations are too weak,

And hell too strong. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

By Adam's hearkening to his wife, mankind, by that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death.

Raleigh's History of the World.

The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by anointing themselves all over, move a man to think that these fables are the effects of imagination; for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

The name of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The nuptial rights his outrage strait attends;

The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:

The incantation backward she repeats,

Inverts her rod, and what she did, defeats.

Garth.

The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, the frivolous rites of their initiations and worship, that might look like incantations and magick, but had no tendency to make mankind the happier. Bentley's Sermons.

INCA'NTATORY. adj. [from incanto, Latin.] Dealing by enchantment; magical.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors, daily delude them. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

TO INCA'NTON. v. a. [in and canton.] To unite to a canton or separate community.

When the cantons of Bern and Zurich proposed the incorporating Geneva in the cantons, the Roman catholics, fearing the protestant interest, proposed the incantoning of Constance as a counterpoise. Addison on Italy.

INCAPAB'ILITY. } n. f. [from incapable.] Inability natural;
INCA'PABLENESS. } disqualification legal.

The inactivity of the soul is its incapacity to be moved with any thing common. Arbutnot.

TO INCARCERATE. v. a. [incarcero, Latin.] To imprison; to confine. It is used in the Scots law to denote imprisoning or confining in a gaol; otherwise it is seldom found.

The pestilent contagion may be propagated by those dense bodies, that easily incarcerate the infected air; as woollen cloaths. Harvey on Consumptions.

INCARCERATION. n. f. [from incarcerate.] Imprisonment; confinement.

TO INCARN. v. a. [incarno, Latin.] * To cover with flesh.

The flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarn it. Wiseman.

TO INCARN. v. n. To breed flesh.

The slough came off, and the ulcer happily incarned. Wisem.

TO INCARNADINE. v. a. [incarnadine, Fr. incarnadino, pale red, Italian.] To dye red. This word I find only once.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood

Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather

The multitudinous sea incarnadine,
 Making the green one red. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO INCARNATE. v. a. [incarnar, Fr. incarno, Latin.]

1. To cloath with flesh; to embody with flesh.

I, who erst contended

With gods to fit the highest, am now constrain'd

Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime,

This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

INCARNATE. participial adj. [incarnat, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Cloathed with flesh; embodied in flesh.

Undoubtedly even the nature of God itself, in the person of the son, is incarnate, and hath taken to itself flesh. Hooker.

They say he cried out of women.

—Yes, that he did, and said they were devils incarnate. Shak.

A most wise sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory death and obedience of the incarnate son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever. Sanderson.

Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign

Both God and man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

1. That which kindles.

Their unreasonable severity was not the least incentive, that blew up into those flames the sparks of discontent. K. Charles.

2. That which provokes; that which encourages; incitement; motive; encouragement; spur. It is used of that which incites, whether to good or ill.

Congruity of opinions, to our natural constitution, is one great incentive to their reception. Glanv. Sceps.

Even the wisdom of God hath not suggested more pressing motives, more powerful incentives to charity, than these, that we shall be judged by it at the last dreadful day. Atterbury.

It encourages speculative persons, with all the incentives of place, profit, and preferment. Addison's Freeholder.

INCENTIVE. adj. Inciting; encouraging.

Competency is the most incentive to industry: too little makes men desperate, and too much careless. Decay of Piety.

INCEPTION. n. f. [inceptio, Latin.] Beginning.

The inception of putrefaction hath in it a maturation. Bac.

INCEPTIVE. adj. [inceptivus, Latin.] Noting beginning.

An inceptive and definitive proposition, as, the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen. Locke.

And when the rage allays, the rain begins. Shakesp. H. VI.

The incessant weeping of my wife,

Forc'd me to seek delays. Shakespeare.

If, by pray'r

Incessant, I could hope to change the will

Of him who all things can, I would not cease

To weary him with my assiduous cries. Milt. Parad. Lost.

In form, a herald of the king she flies,

From peer to peer, and thus incessant cries. Pope's Odyss.

INCESSANTLY. adv. [from incessant.] Without intermission; continually.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,

Above the water were on high extent,

And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly. Fairy Queen.

Who reads

Incessantly, and to his reading brings not

A spirit and judgment equal or superior. Milt. Par. Lost.

The Christians, who carried their religion through so many persecutions, were incessantly comforting one another with the example and history of our Saviour and his apostles. Addison.

INCEST. n. f. [inceste, French; incestum, Latin.] Unnatural and criminal conjunction of persons within degrees prohibited.

Is't not a kind of incest to take life

From thine own sister's shame? Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

INCHOATION. n. f. [inchoatus, Lat.] Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of stellionate, and the inchoations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon's Henry VII.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, Fr. inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

TO INCIDE. v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus some expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm. Quincy.

The menfes are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Arbuthnot.

INCIDENCE. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidence, French.]

INCIDENCY. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidence, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opt.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newt.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidency of his happiness. Norris.

2. [Incident, Latin.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incident, Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; falling in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise mens rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be sometimes guilty of. South's Sermons.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended; not deliberate.

The satisfaction you received from those incident discourses which we have wandered into. Milton.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incident business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers's Sermons.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incident.] Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and incidentally mentioned in Scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderfon.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the bye; by the way.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attained; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO INCINERATE. v. a. [in and cineres, Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurath, and then maketh fragile; and lastly, it doth incinerate and calcinate. Bacon's Natural History.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate. Bacon.

These dregs stick in the capillar insertions of the stomach, and are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey on Consumptions.

INCINERATION. n. f. [incineration, Fr. from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the fixt salt of urine, brought by depuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick lixiviate taste of other salts made by incineration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPECTION. n. f. [in and circumspection.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown's Vul. Err.

INCISED. adj. [inciser, Fr. incisus, Latin.] Cut; made by cutting: as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wiseman's Surgery.

INCISION. n. f. [incision, Fr. incisio, Latin.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a surgeon.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine. Shakespeare.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakefp. As you like it.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South's Sermons.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterion is a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making them more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scour-eth linen cloth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INCISIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Latin.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors. Boye.

INCISOR.

INCISOR. n. f. [incisor, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forefront of the mouth.

INCISORY. adj. [incisire, French.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCISURE. n. f. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.
In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and more easy comminuting of hard food.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse.

Dr. Ridley, in his tract of magnetical bodies, defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.
Governm. of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.
Decay of Piety.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakesp. H. V.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakespeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom.
Bacon.

The principles of nature and common reason, which in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude.
Swift.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting power.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.
Hooker.

A person sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island.
Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.
Pope's Statius.

INCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, Fr. in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.
He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.
Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Act of rudeness.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

INCLEMENCY. n. f. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left.
Dryden.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clemens, Latin.] Unmerciful; unpitying; void of tenderness; harsh.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.
Milton.

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.
Pope.

INCLYNABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition.
People are not always inclynable to the best.
Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclynable.
Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain mens writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclynable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.
Hooker.

Desire,
Inclynable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Having a tendency.
If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclynable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.
Bentley.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclinaison, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point.
The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.
Newton's Opt.

2. Natural aptness.
Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way.
Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.
The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage.
Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well-inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law.
South's Sermons.

4. Love; affection.
We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting.
Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.
Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination.
Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the East or West.

7. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some faces or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation.
Quincy.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclino, Latin; incliner, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part.
Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.
Prov. ii. 18.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.
Rowe.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.
Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
—He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part.
Shak. H. V.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.
The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eyelids.
Milton.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field.
Pope.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclin'd.
Pope.

2. To turn the desire towards any thing.

3. To bend; to incurvate.
With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind,
And made my court.
Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to inclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.
Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.

TO INCLOISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.
Shakespeare.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To inclose; to shut in.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.
This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire lease.
Bacon.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.
Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included.
Swift.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.
O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain.
Shak. R. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.
I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells.
Swift.

INCLUSIVELY.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder's Elements of Speech.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and co-existence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOG. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,

Depend upon it, he'll remain incog.

Addison.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Dec. of Piety.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago

Since gods came down incognito.

Prior.

INCOHERENCE. } n. f. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. }

1. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence; want of dependance of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodw.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOLUMITY. n. f. [incolumitas, Latin.] Safety; security. A word very little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Howel.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repineest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South's Sermons.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord.

Dryden's Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury's Sermons.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, con, and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

To INCOMMULATE. } v. a. [incommodo, Lat. incommode, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants of some parts, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward's Natural History.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Latin.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMODY. n. f. [incommodité, Fr. incommoditas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser's State of Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smok. Wotton's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. K. Charles.

Only the God of nature perfectly knows her; and light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glanv.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creatures. Stilling.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South's Sermons.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice carry a consonancy one to another, whereby both are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale's Common Law.

INCOMPACT. } adj. [in and compact.] Not joined; not

INCOMPACTED. } cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incomplete. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were
To an untirable and continue goodnefs. Shakefp. Timon.
Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakefp. H. VI.

Now this mask

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty,
I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South's Sermons.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustina's, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPA'SSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. f. [properly incompetibility, in and competo, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension; but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. [incompatible, French; rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompetible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompetibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexts, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon's H. VII.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others; especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLI'ANCE. n. f. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

INCOMPOSED. adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Howel.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitnesses in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

INCOMPREHENSIBILITY. n. f. [incomprehensibilité, Fr. from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

INCOMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [incomprehensible, Fr. in and comprehensible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing incomprehensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation, life, sustenance, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Hooker.

INCOMPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibility: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible. Watts.

INCOMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from incomprehensible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite. Locke.

INCOMPRESSIBLE. adj. [incompressible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Their hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

IMCOMPRESSIBILITY. n. f. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCURRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONCEALABLE. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONCEIVABLE. adj. [inconceivable, Fr. in and conceivable.] Incomprehensible; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years. Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure. Locke.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon, without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton's Opt.

INCONCEIVABLY. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of those lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable? South.

INCONCEPTIBLE. adj. [in and conceptible; conceptus, Latin.] Not to be conceived; incomprehensible; inconceivable. A word not used.

It is inconceivable how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption, should after be corrupted. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCONCLU'DENT. adj. [in and concludens, Latin.] Inferring no consequence.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INCONCLU'SIVE. adj. [in and conclusive.] Not enforcing any determination of the mind; not exhibiting cogent evidence.

INCONCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding.

INCONCLU'SIVENESS. n. f. [from inconclusive.] Want of rational cogency.

A man, unskilful in syllogism, at first hearing, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse, wherewith some others, better skilled in syllogism, have been misled. Locke.

INCONCO'CT. } adj. [in and concoct] Unripened; immature;
INCONCO'CTED. } not fully digested.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon's Natural History.

I understand, remember, and reason better in my riper years than when I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCONCO'CTION. n. f. [from inconcoct.] The state of being indigested; unripeness; immaturity.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called iniquation, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon's Natural History.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon's Natural History.

INCO'NDITE. adj. [inconditus, Lat.] Irregular; rude; unpolished.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhymes with suiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Phillips.

INCONDITIONAL. adj. [in and conditional.] Without exception; without limitation; without stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONDITIONATE. adj. [in and condition] Not limited; not restrained by any conditions; absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFO'RMITY. n. f. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity wherunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.

INCONFU'SION. n. f. [in and confusion.] Distinctness.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCONGRUENCE. n. f. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRU'ITY. n. f. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruous.]

1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.
The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She, whom after what form soe'er we see,
Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, she is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr. in and congruous.]

1. Unsuitable; not fitting.
Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the deity. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCONGRUOUSLY. adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unfitly.

INCONNEXEDLY. adv. [in and connex.] Without any connexion or dependance.

Others ascribed hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls good. Spenser.

INCO'NSEQUENCE. n. f. [inconsequence, Fr. inconsequentia, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillingfleet.

INCO'NSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Hakewill on Providence.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferible from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant.

No, I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham's Sophy.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. L'Estrange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton's Opt.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.

INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendor of those glorious heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Creation.

INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsiderare, Fr. inconsideratus, Latin.]

1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent.
When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement, with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

If you lament it,
That which now looks like justice, will be thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham's Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politicks. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Wanting due regard.
He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions, which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties. Decay of Piety.

INCONSIDERATELY. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Mariamne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison's Spectator.

INCONSIDERATENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERATION. n. f. [inconsideration, Fr. in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Taylor.

INCONSI'STING. adj. [in and consist.] Not consistent; incompatible with.

The persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INCONSI'STENCE. } n. f. [from inconsistent.]
INCONSI'STENCY. }

1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together.

There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South's Sermons.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity.
Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.
If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politicks, religion and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last? Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness.

INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.]
1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous.
Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.
Compositions of this nature, when thus restrained, shew that wisdom and virtue are far from being inconsistent with politeness and good humour. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Contrary, so as that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.
The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Locke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

INCONSISTENTLY. adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

INCONSOLABLE. adj. [in. onsolable, Fr. in and console.] Not to be comforted; sorrowful beyond susceptibility of comfort.
Her women will represent to me that she is inconsolable, by reason of my unkindness. Addison.
They take pleasure in an obstinate grief, in rendering themselves inconsolable. Fiddes's Sermons.

INCONSONANCY. n. f. [in and consonancy.] Disagreement with itself.

INCONSPICUOUS. adj. [in and conspicuous.] Indiscernible; not perceptible by the sight.
When an excellent experimenter had taken pains in accurately filling up a tube of mercury, we found that yet there remained store of inconspicuous bubbles. Boyle.

INCONSTANCY. n. f. [inconstantia, Lat. inconstance, Fr. from inconstant.] Unsteadiness; want of steady adherence; mutability of temper or affection.
I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villanous inconstancy of man is able to bear. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the princess' curses,
And his son's rage, or the old king's inconstancy. Denham.
Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison's Spectator.
As much inconstancy and confusion is there in their mixtures or combinations; for it is rare to find any of them pure and unmixed. Woodward's Natural History.

INCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstans, Latin]
1. Not firm in resolution; not steady in affection; various of inclination; wanting perseverance.
He is so naturally inconstant, that I marvel his soul finds not some way to kill his body. Sidney.

2. Changeable; mutable; variable.
O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

INCONSUMABLE. adj. [in and consume.] Not to be wasted.
By arts were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumable by fire, and wherein they burnt the bodies of kings. Brown.

INCONSUMPTIBLE. adj. [in and consumptus, Lat.] Not to be spent; not to be brought to an end; not to be destroyed by fire. This seems a more elegant word than inconsumable.
Before I give any answer to this objection of pretended inconsumptible lights, I would gladly see the effect undoubtedly proved. Digby on Bodies.

INCONTESTABLE. adj. [incontestable, Fr. in and contest.] Not to be disputed; not admitting debate; uncontroversible.
Our own being furnishes us with an evident and incontestable proof of a Deity; and I believe no body can avoid the cogency of it, who will carefully attend to it. Locke.

INCONTESTABLY. adv. [from incontestable.] Indisputably; uncontroversibly.

INCONTIGUOUS. adj. [in and contiguous.] Not touching each other; not joined together.
They seemed part of small bracelets, consisting of equally little incontiguous beads. Boyle.

INCONTINENCE. } n. f. [incontinentia, Lat. in and continence.] In-

INCONTINENCY. } ability to restrain the appetites; unchastity.
The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this; she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly. Sh.
But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with uncharmed eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence. Milton.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence,
And, urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense. Dryden.

The words sine veste Dianam agree better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.

INCONTINENT. adj. [incontinens, Lat. in and continent.]
1. Unchaste; indulging unlawful pleasure.
In these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. Shakesf. As you like it.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, false accusers, incontinent, fierce. 2 Tim. iii. 3.

2. Shunning delay; immediate. This is a meaning now obsolete.
They ran towards the far rebounded noise,
To weet what wight so loudly did lament;
Unto the place they came incontinent. Fairy Queen.
Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinent. Shakesp. Rich. II.
He says he will return incontinent. Shak. Othello.

INCONTINENTLY. adv. [from incontinent.]
1. Unchastely; without restraint of the appetites.
2. Immediately; at once. An obsolete sense. Spenser.
The cause of this war is no other than that we will not incontinently submit ourselves to our neighbours. Hayward.
Incontinently I left Madrid, and have been dogged and way-laid through several nations. Arbutn. and Pope.

INCONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [in and controvertible.] Indisputable; not to be disputed.

INCONTROVERTIBLY. adv. [from incontrovertible.] To a degree beyond controversy or dispute.
The Hebrew is incontrovertibly the primitive and surest test to rely upon; and to preserve the same uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

INCONVENIENCE. } n. f. [inconvenient, French]

INCONVENIENCY. }
1. Unfitness; inexpedience.
They plead against the inconvenience, not the unlawfulness of popish apparel; and against the inconvenience, not the unlawfulness of ceremonies in burial. Hooker.

2. Disadvantage; cause of uneasiness; difficulty.
There is a place upon the top of mount Athos above all clouds of rain, or other inconvenience. Raleigh's History.
Man is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment, and is continually unsecure even of life itself. Tillotson.
The inconvenience of old age makes him incapable of corporal pleasures. Dryden.
Would not quickness of sensation be an inconvenience to an animal, that must lie still where chance has once placed it? Locke.
Consider the disproportion between the worst inconveniences that attends in compliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of God. Rogers.
We are freed from many inconveniences, and we enjoy several advantages. Atterbury.
The things of another world, being distant, operate but faintly upon us: to remedy this inconveniency, we must frequently revolve their certainty and importance. Atterbury.

INCONVENIENT. adj. [inconvenient, Fr. in and conveniens, Lat.]
1. Incommodious; disadvantageous.
They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient for the common people. Spenser on Ireland.
We are not to look that the church should change her publick laws, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient, especially when there may be other remedy against particular inconveniences. Hooker.
He knows that to be inconvenient, which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge's Sermons.

2. Unfit; inexpedient.

INCONVENIENTLY. adv. [from inconvenient.]
1. Unfitly; incommodiously.

INCONY. adj. [perhaps from in and conn, to know.]
1. Unlearned; artless.
2. In Scotland it denotes mischievously unlucky: as, he's an incony fellow. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.
12 D O my

O' my troth, most sweet jests, most incony vulgar wit,
When it comes so smoothly off. Shakespeare.

INCORPORAL. adj. [in and corporal.] Immaterial; distinct from matter; distinct from body.

Why do'st thou bend thine eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do'st hold discourse? Shak. Haml.

Learned men have not resolved us whether light be corporal or incorporal: corporal they say it cannot be, because then it would neither pierce the air, nor solid diaphanous bodies, and yet every day we see the air illighted: incorporal it cannot be, because sometimes it affecteth the sight with offence. Ral.

INCORPORALITY. n. f. [incorporalité, Fr. from incorporal.] Immaterialness; distinctness from body.

INCORPORALLY. adv. [from incorporal.] Without matter; immaterially.

TO INCORPORATE. v. a. [incorporer, French.]

1. To mingle different ingredients so as they shall make one mass.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw to it the less. Bacon's Natural History.

Who the swelling clouds in bladders ties,

To mollify the stubborn clods with rain,

And scatter'd dust incorporate again? Sandys.

2. To conjoin inseparably.

Villainous thoughts, Roderigo, when

These mutualities so marshal the way,

Hard at hand comes the master and main exercise,

The incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.

By your leaves, you shall not stay alone,

'Till holy church incorporate two in one. Shakesp. R. and Ju.

INCORRUPTIBILITY. n. f. [incorruptibilité, Fr. from incorruptible.] Insusceptibility of corruption; incapacity of decay.

Philo, in his book of the world's incorruptibility, alledgeth the verses of a Greek tragick poet. Hakewill.

INCORRUPTIBLE. adj. [incorruptible, Fr. in and corruptible.] Not capable of corruption; not admitting decay.

In such abundance lies our choice,

As leaves a great store of fruit untouch'd,

Still hanging incorruptible. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Our bodies shall be changed into incorruptible and immortal substances, our souls be entertained with the most ravishing objects, and both continue happy throughout all eternity. Wake.

INCORRUPTION. n. f. [incorruption, Fr. in and corruption.] Incapacity of corruption.

So also is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. 1 Cor. xv. 42.

INCORRUPTNESS. n. f. [in and corrupt.]

1. Purity of manners; honesty; integrity.

Probity of mind, integrity, and incorruptness of manners, is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Woodward.

2. Freedom from decay or degeneration.

TO INCRASSATE. v. a. [in and crassus, Lat.] To thicken; the contrary to attenuate.

If the cork be too light to sink under the surface, the body of water may be attenuated with spirits of wine; if too heavy, it may be incrassated with salt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Acids dissolve or attenuate, alcalies precipitate or incrassate. Newton's Opt.

Acids, such as are austere, as unripe fruits, produce too great a stricture of the fibres, incrassate and coagulate the fluids; from whence pains and rheumatism. Arbutnot.

INCRASSATION. n. f. [from incrassate.]

1. The act of thickening.

2. The state of growing thick.

Nothing doth conglaciate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is fixation, that of milk coagulation, and that of oil incrassation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCRASSATIVE.

INCRASSATIVE. n. f. [from incrassate] Having the quality of thickening.

The two latter indicate restringents to stench, and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey on Consumpt.

TO INCREASE. v. n. [in and cresco, Lat.] To grow more in number, or greater in bulk; to advance in quantity or value, or in any quality capable of being more or less.

Hear and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily. Deutr. vi. 3.

Profane and vain babbling will increase unto ungodliness. 2 Tim. ii. 16.

From fifty to threescore he loses not much in fancy, and judgment, the effect of observation, still increases. Dryden.

Henry, in knots, involving Emma's name

Upon this tree; and, as the tender mark,

Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark:

Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,

That as the wound the passion might increase. Prior.

TO INCREASE. v. a. [See ENCREASE.] To make more or greater.

He hath increased in Judah mourning and lamentation. Sam.

I will increase the famine, and break your staff of bread. Ezek. v. 16.

I will increase them with men like a flock. Ezek. xxxvi.

Hye thee from this slaughter-house,

as appears by their numerous spawn. Hale.

It serves to increase that treasure, or to preserve it. Temple.

INCREASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Augmentation; the state of growing more or greater.

For three years he liv'd with large increase

In arms of honour, and esteem in peace. Dryden.

Hail, bards triumphant! born in happier days,

Whose honours with increase of ages grow,

As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow. Pope.

2. Increment; that which is added to the original stock.

3. Produce.

As Hesiod sings, spread waters o'er thy field,

And a most just and glad increase 'twill yield. Denham.

Those grains which grew produced an increase beyond expectation. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Generation.

Into her womb convey sterility;

Dry up in her the organs of increase,

And from her derogate body never spring a babe. Shakesp.

5. Progeny.

Him young Thoasa bore, the bright increase

Of Phorcys. Pope's Odyssey.

6. The state of waxing, or growing full orbed. Used of the moon.

Seeds, hair, nails, hedges and herbs, will grow soonest, if set or cut in the increase of the moon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INCREASER. n. f. [from increase.] He who increases.

INCREATED. adj. Not created.

Since the desire is infinite, nothing but the absolute and increased Infinite can adequately fill it. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

INCREDIBILITY. n. f. [incredibilité, French.] The quality of surpassing belief.

For objects of incredibility, none are so removed from all appearance of truth as those of Corneille's Andromede. Dryd.

INCRE'DIBLE. adj. [incredibilis, Lat.] Surpassing belief; not to be credited.

The ship Argo, that there might want no incredible thing in this fable, spoke to them. Raleigh.

Presenting things impossible to view,

They wander through incredible to true. Granville.

INCRE'DIBLENESS. n. f. [from incredible.] Quality of being not credible.

INCRE'DIBLY. adv. [from incredible.] In a manner not to be believed.

INCRÉDULITY. n. f. [incredulité, French.] Quality of not believing; hardness of belief.

He was more large in the description of Paradise, to take away all scruple from the incredulity of future ages. Raleigh.

INCRE'DULOUS. adj. [incredule, Fr. incredulus, Latin.] Hard of belief; refusing credit.

I am not altogether incredulous but there may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bac.

INCRE'DULOUSNESS. n. f. [from incredulous.] Hardness of belief; incredulity.

INCRE'MABLE. adj. [in and cremo, Latin.] Not consumable by fire.

If from the skin of the salamander these incremable pieces are composed. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

INCREMENT. n. f. [incrementum, Latin.]

1. Act of growing greater.

Divers conceptions are concerning its increment, or inundation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Increase; cause of growing more.

This stratum is expanded at top, serving as the seminary that furnisheth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

3. Produce.

The orchard loves to wave

With Winter winds: the loosen'd roots then drink

Large increment, earnest of happy years. Phillips.

TO INCREPATE. v. a. [inrepeo, Latin.] To chide; to reprehend.

INCREPATION. n. f. [inrepatio, Latin.] Reprehension; chiding.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions and inrepatations. Hammond.

TO INCRUST. } v. a. [incrusto, Latin; incruster, French.]

TO INCRUSTATE. } To cover with an additional coat adhering to the internal matter.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrusted upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon's Natural History.

Some rivers bring forth spars, and other mineral matter, so as to cover and incrusted the stones. Woodward.

Save but our army; and let Jove incrusted

Swords, pikes, and guns with everlasting rust. Pope.

Any of these sun-like bodies in the centers of the several vortices, are so incrusted and weakened as to be carried about in the vortex of the true sun. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

The shield was purchased by Woodward, who incrusted it with a new rust. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

INCRUSTATION. n. f. [incrustation, Fr. from incrusto, Latin.]

An adherent covering; something superinduced.

Having such a prodigious stock of marble, their chapels are laid over with such a rich variety of incrustations as cannot be found in any other part. Addison on Italy.

TO INCUBATE. v. n. [incubo, Latin.] To sit upon eggs.

INCUBATION. n. f. [incubation, Fr. incubatio, Lat.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Raleigh's History of the World.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenuated. Arbutnot.

INCUBUS. n. f. [Latin; incube, Fr.] The night-mare.

The incubus is an inflation of the membranes of the stomach, which hinders the motion of the diaphragma, lungs, pulse, and motion, with a sense of a weight oppressing the breast. Floyer on the Humours.

TO INCULCATE. v. a. [incolco, Latin; inculquer, French.]

To impress by frequent admonitions; to enforce by constant repetition.

Manifest truth may deserve sometimes to be inculcated, because we are too apt to forget it. Atterbury.

Homer continually inculcates morality, and piety to the gods. Broome's Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

INCULCATION. n. f. [from inculcate.] The act of impressing by frequent admonition; admonitory repetition.

INCULT. adj. [inculte, French; incultus, Lat.] Uncultivated; untilld.

Her forests huge,

Incult, robust and tall, by nature's hand

Planted of old. Thomson's Autumn.

INCULPABLE. adv. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblameable; not reprehensible.

Ignorance, so far as it may be resolved into natural inability, is, as to men, at least inculpable, and consequently not the object of scorn, but pity. South.

INCULPABLY. adj. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblameably; without blame.

As to errors or infirmities, the frailty of man's condition has invincibly, and therefore inculpably, exposed him. South.

INCUMBENCY. n. f. [from incumbent.]

1. The act of lying upon another.

2. The state of keeping a benefice.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

INCUMBENT. adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight

Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,

That felt unusual weight. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. i.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it, to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.
Here the rebel giants lye;
And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.
Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.
All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians. Sprat's Sermons.
There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.
Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Atter.

INCUMBENT. n. f. [incumbens, Latin.] He who is in present possession of a benefice.
In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

To INCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, French.] To embarrass.
My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day
Is still incumber'd with some new delay. Dryden's Juven.

To INCUR. v. a. [incurro, Latin.] To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.
I have incurred displeasure from inferiours for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.
They, not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
So judge thou still, presumptuous! 'till the wrath,
Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton.
They had a full perswasive that not to do it were to desert
God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses.
The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon's Natural History.
The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South's Sermons.

INCURABILITY. n. f. [incurabilit , Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.
We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the in- curability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable;
hopeless.
Pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be ministred,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shakesf. King John.
Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shakesf. H. VI.
A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured it in cattle. Arbuthnot.
If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

INCURABLENESS. n. f. [from incurable.] State of not admitting any cure.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.
We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Locke.

INCURIOS. adj. [in and curious.] Negligent; inattentive.
The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye. Derham.
He seldom at the park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind. Swift.

INCURSION. n. f. [from incurro, Latin.]
1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.
Sins of daily incurSION, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South's Sermons.

2. [IncurSION, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.
Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incurSION, upon their havens and roads. Bacon.
Now the Parthian king hath gather'd all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incurSIONs wild
Have wafted Sogdiana. Milton's Parad. Regain'd.
The incurSIONs of the Goths disordered the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INCURVATION. n. f. [from incurvo, Latin.]
1. The act of bending or making crooked.
One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line. Glanv. Sceps.

2. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.
He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice. Stillingsfleet.

To INCURVATE. v. a. [incurvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook.
Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

INCURVITY. n. f. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.
The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To INDAGATE. v. a. [indago, Latin.] To search; to beat out.
INDAGATION. n. f. [from indagate] Search; enquiry; examination.
Paracelsus directs us, in the indagation of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts. Boyle.
Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INDAGATOR. n. f. [indagator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.
The number of the elements of bodies is an enquiry whose truth requires to be searched into by such skilful indagators of nature. Boyle.

To INDART. v. a. [ir and dart.] To dart in; to strike in.
I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
But no more deep will I indart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly. Shakesf.

To INDEBT. v. a.
1. To put into debt.
2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

INDEBTED. participial adj. [in and debt.] Obligated by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt. It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.
If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things. Hooker.
Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is in- debted to us. Lu. xi. 4.
He for himself
Indebted and undone, has nought to bring. Milton.
This blest alliance may
Th' indebted nation bounteously repay. Granville.
Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury's Sermons.
Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers's Sermons.
We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.

INDECENCY. n. f. [indecence, French] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarce criminal.
He will in vain endeavour to reform indecenty in his pupil, which he allows in himself. Locke.

INDECENT. adj. [indecent, Fr. in and decent.] Unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears.
'Till these men can prove these things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, the use of them, as established amongst us, is necessary. South.
Characters, where obscene words were proper in their mouths, but very indecent to be heard. Dryden.

INDECENTLY. adv. [from indecent.] Without decency; in a manner contrary to decency.

INDECIDUOUS. adj. [in and deciducus.] Not falling; not shed.
We find the statue of the sun framed with rays about the head, which were the indeciduous and unshaken locks of Apollo. Brown's Vul. Err.

INDECLINABLE. adj. [indeclinable, Fr. indeclinabilis, Latin.]
Not varied by terminations.
Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numbers it signifies libra. Arbuthnot.

INDECOROUS. adj. [indecorus, Latin.] Indecent; unbecoming.
What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority of that awful excellence to whom he owes his life? Norris.

INDECORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.

INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]
1. In reality; in truth; in verity.
Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant. Sidney.
Though such assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will venture to instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.
Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried streight to the bough:
a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Spenser.

2. Above

2. Above common rate.
Then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever;
'Tis grace indeed. Shakespeare.
Borrows, in mean affairs, his subjects pains;
But things of weight and consequence indeed,
Himself doth in his chamber them debate. Davies.
Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed.
I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,
I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.
3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connection.
This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.
There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.
4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable.
This is indeed more criminal in thee: Shakespeare.
I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bac.
Some sons indeed, some very few we see,
Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.
There is indeed no greater pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addis.
5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.
Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion. Bacon's War with Spain.
- INDEFATIGABLE. adj. [indefatigabilis, in and defatigo, Lat.]
Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour.
Who shall spread his airy flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt. Milton.
The ambitious person must rise early and sit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance: he must be infinitely patient and servile. South.
- INDEFATIGABLY. adv. [from indefatigable.] Without weariness.
A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryd.
- INDEFECTIBILITY. n. f. [from indefectibile.] The quality of suffering no decay; of being subject to no defect.
- INDEFECTIBLE. adj. [in and defectus, Lat.] Unfailing; not liable to defect or decay.
- INDEFEISIBLE. adj. [indefaisible, French.] Not to be cut off;
not to be vacated; irrevocable.
So indefeisible is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry. Decay of Piety.
- INDEFENSIBLE. adj. [in and defensum, Lat.] What cannot be defended or maintained.
As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a straw, so it is altogether false and indefensible. Sanderson.
- INDEFINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]
1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.
Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust. Bacon's Essays.
Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.
Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epick poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.
Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spectator.
- INDEFINITELY. adj. [from indefinite.]
1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.
We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.
We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown's Vulg. Err.
A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalridge.
2. To a degree indefinite.
If the world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part. Ray on the Creation.
- INDEFINITUDE. n. f. [from indefinite.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.
They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not in-

- definitude*, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
- INDELIBERATE. } adj. [indeliberé, Fr. in and deliberate.] Un-INDELIBERATED. } premeditated; done without consideration.
Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberated, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions. Bramhall.
The love of God better can consist with the indeliberate commitments of many sins, than with an allowed persistence in any one. Government of the Tongue.
- INDELIBLE. adj. [indeleble, Fr. indelebilis, Lat. in and deleble.]
It should be written indeleble.]
1. Not to be blotted out or effaced.
Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brands with indelible characters the name and memory. King Charles.
Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil,
And spot indelible thy pocket soil. Gay's Trivia.
2. Not to be annulled.
All endued with indelible power from above to feed, to govern this household, and to consecrate pastors and stewards of it to the world's end. Sprat's Sermons.
- INDELICACY. n. f. [in and delicacy.] Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.
Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impertinent self-love. Addison.
- INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicate.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.
- INDEMNIFICATION. n. f. [from indemnify.]
1. Security against loss or penalty.
2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.
- TO INDEMNIFY. v. a. [in and dammify.]
1. To secure against loss or penalty.
2. To maintain unhurt.
Insolent signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe. Watts.
- INDEMNITY. n. f. [indemnité, French.] Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.
I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.
- TO INDENT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like.
The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.
- TO INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakesp. H. IV.
He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.
- INDENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; inden-tation.
Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
- INDENTATION. n. f. [in and dens, Latin.] An indenture;
waving in any figure.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge across the line, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward on Fossils.
- INDENTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other.
In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
The critick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.
- INDEPENDENCE. } n. f. [independance, Fr. in and dependance.]
INDEPENDENCY. } Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.
Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison's Spectator.
Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency:
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do.

Pope.

INDEPE'NDENT. adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South's Sermons.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addis.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley's Sermons.

INDEPE'NDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderf.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPE'NDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing, independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESE'RT. n. f. [in and desert.] Want of merit.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own independents. Addison's Spectator.

INDESINENTLY. adv. [indefinenter, Fr. in and desinio, Latin.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indefinitely. Ray on the Creation.

INDESTRU'CTIBLE. adj. [in and destruible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestruible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opt.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINA'TION. n. f. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDEVOT'ION. n. f. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of our profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOUT. adj. [indevot, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley's Sermons.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass

Of things to come, at large.

Shakespeare.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXTE'RITY. n. f. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. f. [marcanta, Latin.] A root.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, almost funnel-shaped, opening in six parts, three of which are alternately larger than the others: the lower part of the flower-cup afterwards becomes an oval-shaped fruit, having one cell, with one hard rough seed. It was brought from the Spanish settlements of America into the islands of Barbadoes and Jamaica, where it is cultivated as a medicinal plant, it being a sovereign remedy for curing the bite of wasps, and expelling the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows: after they have dug it up they clean it, mash it, and lay it as a poultice to the wounded part, and are generally successful in the cure. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. f. [acriola, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are round, umbilicated, and placed alternately; the stalks trailing; the cup of the flower is quinquefid; the flowers consist of five leaves in form of a violet; the seeds are roundish and rough, three of them succeeding each flower. The species are five. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. f. [opuntia, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a great number of stamina in the centre, which grow upon the top of the ovary: the ovary afterwards becomes a fleshy umbilicated fruit, with a soft pulp, inclosing many seeds, which are for the most part angular. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. f. A kind of mineral earth.

Indian red, so called by the painters, is a species of ochre; and is a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight: while in the stratum it is of a pure blood colour, and almost of a stony hardness: when dry it is of a fine glowing red, of a rough dusty surface, and, when broken, full of white particles, large, solid, bright, and glittering. It is also called Persian earth, and is dug in the island of Ormuz in the Persian gulph, and also at Bombay. Hill on Fossils.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Latin.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show; to point out.

2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy.

INDICA'TION. n. f. [indication, Fr. ind. catio, from indico, Lat.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison's Guardian.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley's Sermons.

INDI'CATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INDI'CATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.] In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense. Grew's Cosmol.

To INDICT. See INDITE, and its derivatives.

INDI'CTION.

INDICTION. n. f. [indiction, Fr. indico, Latin.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bac.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an intire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which 'till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. } n. f. [indifference, French; indifferentia, INDIFFERENCY. } Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon's Essays.

By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act, 'till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifferency and judgment, and thou can'st not but greatly commend it. Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,

All fortitude of mind supplies;

For how can stony bowels melt,

In those who never pity felt?

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of publick news. Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Latin.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it or no?

—He seems indifferent. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear

Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:

Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison's Cato.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.

It was a remarkable law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republick, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison's Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

These two customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine. Loc.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Medcalfe was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,

Born out of your dominions; having here

No judge indifferent, and no more assurance

Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:

A counsellor, or pleader at the bar,

May want Messala's pow'rful eloquence,

Or be less read than deep Cassellius;

Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd.

Roscommon.

Who would excel, when few can make a test

Betwixt indifferent writing and the best?

Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not borne me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDIFFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Latin.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton's Opt.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation? Addison.

Though a church of England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently. Swift.

2. In a neutral state; without wish or aversion.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' th' other,

And I will look on death indifferently. Shakesp. Jul. Cas.

3. Not well; tolerably; passably; middlingly.

A moyle will draw indifferently well, and carry great burthens. Carew.

I hope it may indifferently entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, kept me but very indifferently from the floor. Gulliver's Travels.

INDIGENCE. } n. f. [indigence, Fr. indigentia, Lat.] Want;
INDIGENCY. } penury; poverty.

Where there is happiness, there must not be indigency, or want of any due comforts of life. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

For ev'n that indigence, that brings me low,

Makes me myself, and him above to know. Dryden.

Athens worshipped God with temples and sacrifices, as if he needed habitation and sustenance; and that the heathens had such a mean apprehension about the indigency of their gods, appears from Aristophanes and Lucian. Bentley.

INDIGENOUS. adj. [indigène, Fr. indigena, Latin.] Native to a country; originally produced or born in a region.

Negroes were all transported from Africa, and are not indigenous or proper natives of America. Brown's Vulg. Err.

It is wonderful to observe one creature, that is, mankind, indigenous to so many different climates. Arbutnot.

INDIGENT. adj. [indigent, French; indigens, Latin.]

1. Poor; needy; necessitous.

Charity consists in relieving the indigent.

Addison.

By nature's wise indulgence; indigent

Of nothing from without.

Phillips.

3. Void; empty.

Such bodies have the tangible parts indigent of moisture.

Bacon's Natural History.

INDIGEST. } adj. [indigeste, Fr. indigestus, Latin.]

INDIGESTED. } 1. Not separated into distinct orders; not regularly disposed.

This mass, or indigested matter, or chaos, created in the beginning, was without the proper form, which it afterwards acquired. Raleigh's History of the World.

Before the seas, and this terrestrial ball,

One was the face of nature, if a face;

Rather a rude and indigested mass.

Dryden's Ovid.

2. Not formed, or shaped.

Set a form upon that indigest project,

So shapeless and so rude.

Shakesp. King John.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakesp. H. VI.

3. Not well considered and methodised.

By irksome deformities, through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God.

Hooker.

The

The political creed of the high-principled men sets the protestant succession upon a firmer foundation than all the indigested schemes of those who profess revolution principles. Swift.

Dreams are bred

From rising fumes of indigested food.

Dryden.

5. Not brought to suppuration.

His wound was indigested and inflamed.

Wifeman.

INDIGESTIBLE. adj. [from in and digestible.] Not conquerable in the stomach; not convertible to nutriment.

Eggs are the most nourishing and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible: no body can digest the same quantity of them as of other food.

Arbutnot on Diet.

INDIGESTION. n. f. [indigestion, Fr. from in and digestion.]

The state of meats unconcocted.

The fumes of indigestion may indispose men to thought, as well as to diseases of danger and pain.

Temple.

TO INDIGITATE. v. a. [indigito, Lat.] To point out; to show.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers: the depressing this finger, which in the left hand implied but six, in the right hand indigitated six hundred.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

As though there were a feminality of urine, we foolishly conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle, and can thereby indigitate their affections.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

We are not to indigitate the parts transmittent.

Harvey.

INDIGITATION. n. f. [from indigitate.] The act of pointing out or showing.

Which things I conceive no obscure indigitation of providence.

More against Atheism.

INDIGN. adj. [indigne, Fr. indignus, Latin.]

1. Unworthy; undeserving.

Where there is a kingdom that is altogether unable or indign to govern, is it just for another nation, that is civil or policed, to subdue them?

Bacon's Holy War.

2. Bringing indignity. This is a word not in use.

And all indign and base adversities

Make head against my estimation.

Shakespeare's Othello.

He scourg'd with many a stroke th' indignant waves.

Milt.

The lustful monster fled, pursued by the valorous and indignant Martin.

Arbut. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

What rage that hour did Albion's soul possess,

Let chiefs imagine, and let lovers guess!

He strides indignant, and with haughty cries

To single fight the fairy prince defies.

Tickel.

INDIGNATION. n. f. [indignation, Fr. indignatio, Latin.]

1. Anger mingled with contempt or disgust.

Suspend your indignation against my brother, 'till you derive better testimony of his intent.

Shak. King Lear.

From those officers, warm with indignation at the insolences of that vile rabble, came words of great contempt.

But keep this swelling indignation down,

And let your cooler reason now prevail.

Rowe.

2. The anger of a superiour.

There was great indignation against Israel.

2 Kings iii. 27.

3. The effect of anger.

If heav'ns have any grievous plague in store,

Let them hurl down their indignation

On thee, thou troubler of the world.

Shakesp. Rich. III.

INDIGNITY. n. f. [indignitas, from indignus, Latin; indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities.

Hooker.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to say or do any thing unbecoming myself.

King Charles.

Man he made, and for him built

Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,

Him lord pronounc'd; and, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings,

And flaming ministers, to watch and tend

Their earthly charge.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

He does not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy.

Swift.

To more exalted glories born,

Thy mean indignities I scorn.

Pattison.

INDIGO. n. f. [indicum, Latin.] A plant, by the Americans called anil.

It hath pennated leaves, terminated by a single lobe: the flowers, disposed in a spike, consist of five leaves, and are of the papilionaceous kind; the uppermost petal being larger than the others, rounder, and lightly furrowed on the side: the lower leaves are short, terminating in a point: in the middle of the flower is the style, which afterward becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour. Miller.

INDIRECT. adj. [indirect, Fr. indirectus, Latin.]

1. Not strait; not rectilinear.

2. Not tending otherwise than collaterally or consequentially to a point.

The tender prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;

But by his mother was perforce withheld.

—Fy, what an indirect and peevish course

Is this of her's?

Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. Not fair; not honest.

Think you, that any means under the sun

Can assure so indirect a course?

Daniel's Civil War.

Those things which they do know they may, upon sundry indirect considerations, let pass; and although themselves do not err, yet may they deceive others.

Hooker.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well

Enter'd so fair, should turn aside, to tread

Paths indirect.

Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

Indirect dealing will be discovered one time or other, and then he loses his reputation.

Tillotson.

INDIRECTION. n. f. [in and direction]

1. Oblique means; tendency not in a straight line.

And thus do we, of wisdom and of reach,

With windlances, and with essays of byas,

By indirections find directions out.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. Dishonest practice.

I had rather coin my heart than wring

From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,

By any indirection.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

INDIRECTLY. adv. [from indirect.]

1. Not in a right line; obliquely.

2. Not in express terms.

Still she suppresses the name Ithaca, which continues his doubts and hopes; and at last she indirectly mentions it.

Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

3. Unfairly; not rightly.

He bids you then resign

Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held

From him the true challenger.

Shakesp. Henry V.

He that takes any thing from his neighbour, which was justly forfeited, to satisfy his own revenge or avarice, is tied to repentance, but not to restitution: because I took the forfeiture indirectly, I am answerable to God for my unhandsome, unjust, or uncharitable circumstances.

Taylor.

INDIRECTNESS. n. f. [in and directness.]

1. Obliquity.

2. Unfairness.

INDISCERNIBLE. adj. [in and discernible.] Not perceptible; not discoverable.

Speculation, which, to my dark soul,

Depriv'd of reason, is as indiscernible

As colours to my body, wanting sight.

Denham's Sophy.

INDISCERNIBLY. adv. [from indiscernible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

INDISCERPTIBLE. adj. [in and discerptible.] Not to be separated; incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

INDISCERPTIBILITY. n. f. [from indiscerptible.] Incapability of dissolution.

INDISCOVERY. n. f. [in and discovery.] The state of being hidden. An unusual word.

The ground of this assertion was the magnifying esteem of the ancients, arising from the indiscovery of its head.

Brown.

INDISCREET. adj. [indiscret, Fr. in and discret.] Imprudent; incautious; inconsiderate; injudicious.

Why then

Are mortal men so fond and indiscreet,

So evil gold to seek unto their aid;

And having not complain, and having it upbraid.

Fa. Qu.

If thou be among the indiscreet, observe the time; but be continually among men of understanding.

Ecclus. xxvii. 12.

INDISCREETLY. adv. [from indiscreet.] Without prudence; without consideration; without judgment.

Job on justice hath aspersions flung,

And spoken indiscreetly with his tongue.

Sandys.

Let a great personage undertake an action passionately, let him manage it indiscreetly, and he shall have enough to flatter him.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

INDISCRETION. n. f. [indiscretion, Fr. in and discretion.] Imprudence; rashness; inconsideration.

Indiscretion sometimes serves us well,

When our deep plots do fail.

Shakesp. Hamlet:

His offences did proceed rather from negligence, rashness, or other indiscretion, than from any malicious thought.

Hayward.

Loose papers have been obtained from us by the importunity and divulged by the indiscretion of friends, although restrained by promises.

Swift.

INDISCRIMINATE. adj. [indiscriminatus, Latin.] Undistinguishable; not marked with any note of distinction.

INDISCRIMINATELY. adv. [from indiscriminate.] Without distinction.

Others use defamatory discourse purely for love of talk, whose whose speech, like a flowing current, bears away indiscriminately whatever lies in its way. Government of the Tongue.

Liquors, strong of acid salts, destroy the blueness of the infusion of our wood; and liquors indiscriminately, that abound with sulphureous salts, restore it. Boyle.

INDISPENSABLE. adj. [French.] Not to be remitted; not to be spared; necessary.

Rocks, mountains, and caverns, against which these exceptions are made, are of indispensable use and necessity, as well to the earth as to man. Woodward's Natural History.

INDISPENSABLENESS. n. f. [from indispensable.] State of not being to be spared; necessity.

INDISPENSABLY. adv. [from indispensable.] Without dispensation; without remission; necessarily.

Every one must look upon himself as indispensably obliged to the practice of duty. Addison's Freeholder.

TO INDISPOSE. v. a. [indisposer, French.]

1. To make unfit. With for.

Nothing can be reckoned good or bad to us in this life, any farther than it prepares or indisposes us for the enjoyments of another. Atterbury.

2. To disincline; to make averse. With to.

It has a strange efficacy to indispose the heart to religion.

South's Sermons.

3. To disorder; to disqualify for its proper functions.

The soul is not now hindered in its actings by the distemperature of indisposed organs. Glanv. Scept.

4. To disorder slightly with regard to health.

Though it weakened, yet it made him rather indisposed than sick, and did no ways disable him from studying. Walton.

5. To make unfavourable. With towards.

The king was sufficiently indisposed towards the persons, or the principles of Calvin's disciples. Clarendon.

INDISPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from indisposed.] State of unfitness or disinclination; depraved state.

It is not any innate harshness in piety that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposedness of our own hearts. Decay of Piety.

INDISPOSITION. n. f. [indisposition, Fr. from indispose.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health than any set sickness. Hayward.

I have known a great fleet lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to leave the command. Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions, into the progress of the disease. L'Estrange.

His life seems to have been prolonged beyond its natural term, under those indispositions which hung upon the latter part of it. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Disinclination; dislike.

The indisposition of the church of Rome to reform herself, must be no stay unto us from performing our duty to God. Hooker.

The mind, by every degree of affected unbelief, contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing. Att.

INDISPUTABLE. adj. [in and disputable.] Uncontrovertible; incontestable.

There is no maxim in politicks more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours to reserve for those who do national services. Addison's Guardian.

The apostle asserts a clear indisputable conclusion, which could admit of no question. Rogers's Sermons.

INDISPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from indisputable.] The state of being indisputable; certainty.

INDISPUTABLY. adv. [from indisputable.]

1. Without controversy; certainly.

The thing itself is questionable, nor is it indisputably certain what death she died. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Without opposition.

They questioned a duty that had been indisputably granted to so many preceding kings. Howell's Vocal Forest.

INDISSOLVABLE. adj. [in and dissolvable.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newt. Opt.

2. Not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law styles them an indissolvable bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [indissolubilité, Fr. from indissoluble.] Resistance of a dissolving power; firmness; stableness.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together, from whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility. Locke.

INDISSOLUBLE. adj. [indissoluble, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissoluble.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

Ere yet she grew

To this deep-laid indissoluble state. Thomson's Spring.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever.

Far more comfort it were for us to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one. Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet saith we are all his generation. Bacon's holy War.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations. South.

INDISSOLUBLENES. n. f. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the Divine Will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition. Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner resisting all separation.

On they move

Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,

Nor straitning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide

Their perfect ranks. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The remaining ashes, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass. Boyle.

They willingly unite,

Indissolubly firm; from Dubris south

To northern Orcades. Phillips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinct, Fr. in and distinctus, Latin.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with thought,

The rack dissimms, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

She warbled in her throat,

And tun'd her voice to many a merry note;

But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,

Ev'n 'till we make the main and th' aerial blue

An indistinct regard. Shakespeare's Othello.

INDISTINCTION. n. f. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Omission of discrimination.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God. Spratt.

INDISTINCTLY. adv. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusedly; uncertainly.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly, the light there vanishing by degrees. Newton's Opt.

2. Without being distinguished.

Making trial thereof, both the liquors soaked indistinctly through the bowl. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.] Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter than before; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the stoicks apathy, and by the scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individuel, Fr. individuus, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return

To the cold marble, or contracted urn?

And never shall those particles agree,

That were in life this individual he?

Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so
Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide

United, as one individual soul,

For ever happy.

Milt. Parad. Lost, b. v.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.

Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill on Providence.

TO INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuus, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More against Atheism.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individue him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individue] That which makes an individual.

What is the principle of individue? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuus, Lat.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Croesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDIVISIBILITY. } n. f. [from indivisible.] State in which no
INDIVISIBLENESS. } more division can be made.

A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

INDOCIBLE. adj. [in and docible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.

INDOCIL. adj. [indocile, Fr. indocili, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.

INDOCILITY. n. f. [indocilité, Fr. in and docility.] Unteachable-ness; refusal of instruction.

TO INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [endoctriner, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth and co-operative excellency of their receptions. Glanv. Sceps.

INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinate.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior in-doctrinations, yet are these authorities but temporary, and not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Bro.

INDOLENCE. } n. f. [in and doleo, Latin; indolence, French.]
INDOLENCY. }

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain.

Ainsworth.

2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless.

Ill fits a chief

To waste long nights in indolent repose.

Pope's Iliad.

INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]

1. With freedom from pain.

2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.

While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,

Calm and serene you indolently sit.

Addison.

TO INDO'W. v. a. [indotare, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbs and floods there could be none, when there was no in-draughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.

Navigable rivers are so many indraughts to attain wealth.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

TO INDRE'NCH. v. a. [from drench.] To soak; to drown.

My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep

They lie indrench'd.

Shakes. Troilus and Cressida.

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits. Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Wotton's Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spratt's Sermons.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley's Sermons.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the in-dubitately heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitately heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

TO INDUCE. v. a. [induire, Fr. induco, Latin.]

1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.

The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hook.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse

Induc'd me.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person

person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,

Then mark th' inducement.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He lives

Higher degree of life; inducement strong

For us.

Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

My inducement hither,

Was not at present here to find my son. Milton's Agonist.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDUCER. n. f. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

TO INDUCT. v. a. [inductus, Latin.]

1. To introduce; to bring in.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians. Sandys's Travels.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDUCTION. n. f. [induction, Fr. inductio, Latin.]

1. Introduction; entrance.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction full of prosp'rous hope. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logick.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon's Natural History.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive. With to.

A brutish vice,

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve.

Milt. Par. Lost.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible conclusency in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO INDUE. v. a. [induo, Latin.]

1. To invest.

One first matter all,

Indu'd with various forms.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd,

She, with her fair hand, still'd into the nostrils of his friend.

Chapman's Iliads.

TO INDU'LGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Latin.]

1. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,

Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd. Pers.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. L. che.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

2. To grant not of right, but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The virgin entering bright, indulg'd the day

To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice;

But since among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophick fare,

This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,

And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Juv.

My friend, indulge one labour more,

And seek Atrides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light

Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Dunciad.

TO INDU'LGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence. With to.

He must, by indulging to any one sort of reproveable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest.

Government of the Tongue.

INDU'LGENCE. } n. f. [indulgence, Fr. from indulge.]
INDU'LGENCY. }

1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;

And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,

She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milt. Parad. Lost.

The glories of our isle,

Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,

Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryd. K. Arthur.

2. Forbearance; tenderness; opposite to rigour.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

In known images of life, I guess

The labour greater, as th' indulgence less.

Pope.

3. Favour granted.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,

I'll canvas thee. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,

The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but in reference to profit.

Decay of Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences.

Atterbury.

INDU'LGENT. adj. [indulgent, Fr. indulgens, Latin.]

1. Kind; gentle.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be

Th' indulgent censure of posterity.

Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to. With of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden's Æn.

INDU'LGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hamm.

INDU'LT. } n. f. [Ital. and French.] Privilege or exemption.
INDU'LT. }

TO INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Latin.] To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral-line.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INDURATE. v. a.

1. To make hard.

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one.

Sharp's Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to fear the conscience.

INDURA'TION. n. f. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.

This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent.

Decay of Piety.

INDU'STRIOUS. adj. [industrius, Fr. industrius, Lat.] Diligent; laborious; assiduous. Opposed to slithful.

He

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser on Ireland.

Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious foldieriship. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His thoughts were low :
To vice industrious ; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Designed ; done for the purpose.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More's Divine Dialogues.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.]

1. Diligently ; laboriously ; assiduously.

If industriously

I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

Some friends to vice industriously defend
These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryd. Juv.

2. For the set purpose ; with design.
Great Britain was never before united in itself under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [industrie, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence ; assiduity.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

See the laborious bee

For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowl.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More's Antid.

To INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Latin.] To intoxicate ; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriateth less than wine pure : fops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriates more than wine of itself. Bac.

Fish, entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk ; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon's Natural Hist.

INEBRIA'TION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness ; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue to those intentions they are applied, experience will make us grant ; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable ; unutterable ; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the son, with calm aspect, and clear,
Light'ning divine, ineffable, serene !

Made answer. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd,

Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That which can produce no effect.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk ; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err ; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanv. Sceps.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect ; weak ; without power.

The publick reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil : the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hook.

The death of Patrocles, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy ; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some mens devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFICACIOUS. adj. [inefficace, Fr. inefficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effects ; weak ; feeble.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use of it, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy ? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Latin.] Want of power ; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. } n. f. [from inelegant.] Absence of beauty ;
INELEGANCY. } want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming ; not beautiful : opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix

Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring

Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Mean ; despicable ; contemptible.

Modern criticks, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Latin.] Not persuasive ; not oratorical : opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.] Unfit ; useless ; trifling ; foolish.

The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways,

Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,

No cause of these appearances they'll find,

But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [inepté, Latin.] Triflingly ; foolishly ; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanv. Sceps.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inegalité, Fr. from in and equalitas and in and equalis, Latin.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness ; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed as well wrought as the object-glasses use to be ; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton's Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose ; state of not being adequate ; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South's Sermons.

4. Change of state ; unlikeness of a thing to itself ; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others ; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error ; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hamm.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error ; infallibly.

INERRINGLY.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind.

Glanv. Sceps.

INERT. adj. [iners, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find;

The cause of all things is by you assign'd.

Blackmore.

Informer of the planetary train!

Without whose quickening glance their cumb'rous orbs

Were brute unlively mafs, inert and dead.

Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye pow'rs,

Suspend a while your force inertly strong.

Dunciad.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [inestimable, Fr. inestimabilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,

A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;

Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,

Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels.

Shakes. Rich. III.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality.

Abbot.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits.

Boyle.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,

On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!

Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitable, Fr. inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.

Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable

Subdues us.

Milton.

Since my inevitable death you know,

You safely unavailing pity show.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.] Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command

Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Milton's Par. Lost.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh?

South's Sermons.

To look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point.

Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.

Harvey on Consumptions.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.

Bentley.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusabilis, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power.

L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.

Addison's Freeholder.

Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would inance their guilt.

Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.

Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men.

Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify him.

South's Sermons.

INEXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.

Brown.

INEXHA'LE. adj. [in and exhale.] That which cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhalable parts into consistence.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEXHA'USTED. adj. [in and exhausted.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,

An early, rich, and inexhausted vein.

Dryden.

INEXHA'USTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite.

Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum.

Locke.

INEXISTENT. adj. [in and existent.] Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained.

Boyle.

INEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and existence.] Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem.

Broome on the Od. ff.

INEXORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. inexorabilis, Latin.] Not to be intreated; not to be moved by intreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,

Oh ten times more, than tygers of Hyrcania.

Shakes. H. VI.

Inexorable dog.

Shak. Merch. of Ven. ce.

The scourge

Inexorable calls to penance.

Milton.

The guests invited came,

And with the rest th' inexorable dame.

Dryden.

Th' inexorable gates were barr'd,

And nought was seen, and nought was heard,

Pope's St. Cæcilia.

But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations.

Rogers.

INEXPE'DIENCE. n. f. [in and expediency.] Want of fitness;

INEXPE'DIENCY. n. f. [in and expediency.] Want of propriety; unsuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiours to look well to the expediency and inexpediency of what they enjoin in different things.

Sanderfon.

INEXPE'DIENT. adj. [in and expedient.] Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs.

Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient.

Smalridge's Sermons.

INEXPE'RIENCE. n. f. [inexperience, Fr. in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random argue thine inexperience.

In letters and in laws

Not inexpert.

INEXPIABLE. adj. [inexpiable, French; inexpiabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be atoned.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:

My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the way

To raise in me inexpiable hate?

Milton's Agonistes.

INEXPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiable.] To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiably bad,

And 'tis much safer to leave out than add.

Roscommon.

INEXPLEABLY. adv. [in and expleo, Lat.] Insatiably. A word not in use.

What were these harpies but flatterers, delators, and the inexpleably covetous.

Sandys's Travels.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explico, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor?

Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than pression or motion propagated through ether.

Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,

Than this obscure inexplicable pow'r.

Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLY. adv. [from inexplicable.] In a manner not to be explained.

INEXPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and express.] Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs

Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Orb within orb.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpressible communications. South's Sermons.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being. Stillington.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words; and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives so inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied. Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.] To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant. Hammond.

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezek. xxxvi. 3.

I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruin my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with most indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity. King Charles.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles, hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,

And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences. Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain our springs, like old mens children, be

The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following Spring. Derb.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, French.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner. Bacon's Henry VII.

That small infantry,
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

INFARCTION. n. f. [in and farcio, Latin.] Stuffing; constipation.

An hypocondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen. Harvey.

TO INFATUATE. v. a. [infatuo, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuer, French.] To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated, gentile world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

The

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it. Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrensy so extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

May hypocrites,

That sily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, 'till, by enchanting cups

Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Phillips.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South's Serm.

INFAUSTING. n. f. [from infaustus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon's Henry VII.

INFESIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable.

This is so difficult and infesible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glanv. Sceps.

TO INFECT. v. a. [infecter, French; infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

They put such words in the mouths of one of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shak. R. III.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shakespeare.

Ev'ry day

It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so

To make the scepter his. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakesp.
She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north-star. Shakespeare.

I am return'd your soldier;

No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The love-tale

Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch

Ezekiel saw. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,

And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakesp. Macbeth.

INFECTION. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from Quincy.

What a strange infection

Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The blessed gods

Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shakesp. R. III.

Hence,

Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon's Natural History.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee! Shakespeare.

In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shakespeare.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable

To what infectiously itself affects. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness. 2

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidn.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicité, Fr. infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glanv. Sceps. c. 1.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

TO INFERR. v. a. [inferer, French; infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou can't attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker, and infer

Thee also happier, shall not be with-held

Thy hearing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

Great,

Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth,

Though in comparison of heav'n so small,

Nor glittering, may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premisses, they should all infer the same conclusion. Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,

Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, French, from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanv.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferrible from their premisses. Brown.

INFERRIORITY. n. f. [inferiorité, Fr. from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiourity which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERRIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdainning him. South.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,

And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERRIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean.

His gigantick limbs, with large embrace,

Infold nine acres of infernal space. Dryden's Æn.

INFERNAL Stone. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned also the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholsome. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To INFE'ST. v. a. [infester, Fr. infesto, Latin.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause. Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, 'till the time beforementioned was expired. Hook.

Unto my feeble breast

Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou do'st infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes do'st enrage. Spenser.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon's Henry VII.

These, said the genius, are envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life. Addison's Spectator.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFESTIVITY. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFESTRED. adj. [in and fester.] Rankling; inveterate.

This cursed creature, mindful of that old
Infestred grudge, the which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,

His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt. Spenser.

INFEDA'TION. n. f. [in and feudum, Lat.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infederation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale's Common Law of England.

INFIDEL. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidelité, French; infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?

A thousand ages in that sea must sink:

Time's nothing but a word; a million

Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls

The inward bent and motion of our souls!

Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees

Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought

Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:

Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,

Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.] Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

This is Antonio,

To whom I am so infinitely bound. Shakes. Merch. of Ven.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightyness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar

Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [infinité, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFIRM. adj. [infirm, French; infirmus, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;

A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakesp.

That on my head all might be visited,

Thy frailty, and infirm sex, forgiv'n;

To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I'll go no more;

I am afraid to think what I have done:

Look out again, I dare not.

—Infirm of purpose;

Give me the dagger. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Not stable; not solid.

He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he, who fails in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

To INFIRM. v. a. [infirm, Fr. infirm, Lat.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points. Raleigh's Essays.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INFIRMARY. n. f. [infirmarie, French.] Lodgings for the sick.

These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an *infirm*ary, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.

I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakesp. Henry VI.

If he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worships to think it was his infirmities. Shak. Julius Cæs.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakness; fault.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;

But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakespeare.

Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarendon.

3. Disease;

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities, as are no small diminution to it, when discovered.

Addison's Spectator.

3. Disease; malady.

General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, may.

Hooker.

INFIRMNESS. n. f. [from infirm.] Weakness; feebleness.

Some experiments may discover the infirmness and insufficiency of the peripatetick doctrine.

Boyle.

To INFIX. v. a. [infixus, Latin.] To drive in; to fasten.

And at the point two stings infix'd are,

Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steel exceeden far. Fa. Qu.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingenitus, Latin.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula; and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenite, moving force,

That makes them always downward take their course. Black.

INGENUITY. n. f. [ingenuité, Fr. from ingenuous.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or other of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Wotton.

My constancy I to the planets give;

My truth, to them who at the court do live;

Mine ingenuity and openness

To jesuits; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gov. of the Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confess, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [From ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanv. Sceps.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Woodward.

INGENUOUS. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument: yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hooker.

Infusing into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton on Education.

If an ingenuous detestation of this shameful vice be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. K. Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuous.] Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

Ingeniously I speak,

No blame belongs to thee. Shakesp. Timon.

TO INGEST. v. a. [ingestus, Lat.] To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the osteridge no alteration. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,

Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.

INGESTION. n. f. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLORIOUS. adj. [inglorius, Latin.] Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Lest fear return them back to Egypt, chusing

Inglorious life with servitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howel.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

INGLORIOUSLY. adv. [from inglorious] With ignominy; with want of glory.

This ease the chief o'ercome,

Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

INGOT. n. f. [lingot, French; or from ingegoten, melted, Dut.] A mass of metal.

Some others were new driven, and dissent

Into great ingots, and to wedges square. Fairy Queen.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;

For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,

Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,

And death unloadeth thee. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Within the circle arms and tripods lye,

Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high. Dryden's Æn.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virg. Georg.

2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another.

3. To plant any thing not native.

All his works on me,

Good or not good, ingraft, my merits those

Shall perfect, and for those alone. Milton.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;

This fellow would ingraft a foreign name

Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Tis great pity that the noble Moor

Should hazard such a place as his own second,

With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shakesp. Othello.

Ingraffed love he bears to Cæsar. Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

INGRAFTMENT. n. f. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRA'VE. } adj. [ingratus, Latin; ingrat, French.]

INGRA'TEFUL. }

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

And you degen'rate, you ingrate revolts,

You bloody Neros. Shakesp.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?

Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me

All he could have: I made him just and right,

Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milt. Par. Lost.

Words! which no ear ever to hear in heav'n

Expected; least of all from thee, ingrate! Milt. Par. Lost.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is pleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight. Bacon's Natural History.

He gives no ingrateful food. Milton.

TO INGRA'TIATE. v. a. [in and gratia, Lat.] To put in favour; to recommend to kindness.

Those

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiations with the people. King Charles.

Their managers turn water into blood for them, make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 479.

INGRA'TITUDE. n. f. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd. }
Dryden.

INGRE'DIENT. n. f. [ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.] Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 998.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental fight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton's Opticks.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison's Guard. N<sup>o</sup>. 155.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a publick character. Rogers's Sermons.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INGRESS. n. f. [ingres, French; ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 836.

Those air-bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INGRE'SSION. n. f. [ingression, French; ingressio, Lat.] The act of entering.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingression. Digby on Bodies.

INGUINAL. adj. [inguinal, French; inguen, Lat.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterised with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands. Arbuthnot.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitation. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

INHA'BITANT. n. f. [from inhabit.] Dweller; one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhabitants, which were very fair and fat people. Abbot.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of negroes, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude, subjected unto the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue. Brown.

For his supposed love a third
Lays greedy hold upon a bird,
And stands amaz'd to find his dear
A wild inhabitant of th' air. Waller.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right. Pope.

INHABITA'TION. n. f. [from inhabit.]

1. Habitation; place of dwelling.

Universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd. Milton's Agonist.

2. The act of inhabiting or planting with dwellings; state of being inhabited.

By knowing this place we shall the better judge of the beginning of nations, and of the world's inhabitation. Raleigh.

3. Quantity of inhabitants.

We shall rather admire how the earth contained its inhabitation than doubt it. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi.

INHA'BITER. n. f. [from inhabit.] One that inhabits; a dweller.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters, of this island. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Wo to the inhabiters of the earth. Rev. viii. 13.

They ought to understand, that there is not only some inhabiter in this divine house, but also some ruler. Derham.

TO INHA'LE. v. a. [inhalo, Latin.] To draw in with air; to inspire.

Martin was walking forth to inhale the fresh breeze of the evening. Arbuthnot's and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

But from the breezy deep the blest inhale
The fragrant murmurs of the western gale. Pope's Odyssey.

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending fun. Thomson's Spring.

INHARMO'NIUS. adj. [in and harmonious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmonious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts. Felton.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmonious, and shock the ear. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

TO INHE'RE. v. n. [inhæreo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme and scattering bright, can love inhere. Donne.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependence on a subject. Digby on Bodies.

INHE'RENT. adj. [inherent, French; inhærens, Lat.] Existing in something else, so as to be inseparable from it; innate; inborn.

I will not do't,
Left I surcease to honour mine own truth;
And, my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden's Juvenal.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be subsistent, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley's Sermons.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley's Serm.

TO INHE'RIT. v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shak. As you like it.

Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,

Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shakespeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile sherries. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Mat.

The son can receive from him the portion of good things, and advantages of education naturally due to him, without pite, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 198.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakespeare.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none,

To bury so much gold under a tree,

And never after to inherit it. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

INHERITABLE. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

INHERITANCE. n. f. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

In the book of Numbers it is writ,

When the son dies let the inheritance

Descend unto the daughter.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house. Gen. xxxi. 14.

Claim our just inheritance of old.

Oh dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee

Only a sad inheritance of woe?

Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,

Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Smith.

2. In Shakespeare, possession.

You will rather shew our general lowts

How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,

For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard

Of what that want might ruin.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

INHERITOR. n. f. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins,

Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors.

The sole inheritor

Of all perfections that a man may owe.

The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakesp.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they must it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

INHERITRESS. n. f. [from inheritor.] An heiress; a woman that inherits.

Having given artificially some hopes to marry Anne, inheritrices to the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

INHERITRIX. n. f. [from inheritor.] An heiress. This is now more commonly used, though inheritrices be a word more analogically English.

courtesy to strangers.

INHUMAN. adj. [inhuman, Fr. inhumanus, Latin.] Barbarous; savage; cruel; uncompassionate.

A just war may be persecuted after a very unjust manner; by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations. Atterbury's Sermons.

The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent.

Gulliver's Travels.

Princes and peers attend! while we impart

To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart. Pope's Odyssey.

INHUMANITY. n. f. [inhumanité, French; from inhuman.] Cruelty; savageness; barbarity.

Banished

Her mind, beams, state, far from thy weak twigs,

And love with lover hurts is inhumanity.

Sidney, b. i.

The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence. King Charles.

Each social feeling fell,

And joyless inhumanity pervades,

And petrifies the heart.

INHUMANLY. adv. [from inhuman.] Savagely; cruelly; barbarously.

O what are these

Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death

Inhumanly to men; and multiply

Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew

His brother.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most inhumanly treated by my countrymen. Swift.

TO INHUMATE. } v. a. [inhumer, French; humo, Lat.] To

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction.

Hooker, b. i.

My duty cannot suffer

T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;

Though the injunction be to bar my doors,

And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you.

Shakespeare.

For, still they knew; and ought t' have still remember'd

The high injunction; not to taste that fruit,

Whoever tempted.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency.

South.

2. [In law.] Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding.

Cowell.

TO INJURE. v. a. [injurier, French; injuria, Lat.]

1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief undeservedly; to wrong.

They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design; then bate always whom they have once injured.

Temple.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

2. To annoy; to affect with any inconvenience.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care

Hath unbefought provided.

Milton.

INJURER. n. f. [from injure, Lat.] He that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs another.

Ill deeds are well turn'd back upon their authors;

And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just.

Benj. Johnson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer.

Atterb.

INJURIOUS. adv. [from injury; injurius, Lat. injurieux, Fr.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort

This tribute from us, we were free.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,

By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse.

Dryden.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,

After offence returning; to regain

Love once possess'd.

Milton's Agonist. l. 1003.

3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault; or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding.

Tillotson's Sermons.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachful; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be.

Sidney, b. ii.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image: which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God?

South's Sermons.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who thus endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition.

Swift.

INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked.

Pope and Gay.

INJURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from injurious.] Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression.

King Charles.

INJURY. n. f. [injuria, Lat. injure, Fr.]

1. Hurt without justice.

The town of Bouline, and other places, were acquired by just title of victory; and therefore in keeping of them no injury was offered.

Hayward.

Riot ascends above their loftiest tow'rs,

And injury and outrage.

Milton.

2. Mischief; detriment.

Many times we do injury to a cause by dwelling upon trifling arguments.

Watts's Logick.

3. Annoyance.

Great injuries such vermin as mice and rats do in the fields.

Mortimer.

4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation.

Casting off the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king; and, by how much he was the less able to do, talking so much the more, spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles.

Bacon.

INJUSTICE. n. f. [injustice, French; injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.

Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand injustices without being discovered, or at least without being punished.

Swift.

INK. n. f. [encre, French; inchiostro, Italian.] The black liquor with which men write.

Mourn boldly my ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine.

Sidney, b. ii.

O! she's fallen

Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea

Hath drops too few to wash her clean again.

Shakespeare.

Write, my queen,

And with mine eyes I'll drink the works you send,

Though ink be made of gall.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Like madmen they hurl'd stones and ink.

Benj. Johnson.

Intending

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave;
In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the fable wave. Waller.
Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.
The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Howel's Vocal Forest.
He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth; and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.
I could hardly refrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. Ink is used for any liquor with which they write: as, red ink; green ink.
To INK. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink:
as, his face is all over inked.
INKHORN. n. f. [ink and horn.] A portable case for the instruments of writing, commonly made of horn.
Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
Ere that we will suffer such a prince
To be disgrac'd by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight. Shakesp.
What is more frequent than to say, a silver inkhorn. Grew.
INKLE. n. f. A kind of narrow fillet; a tape.
Incles, caddises, cambricks, lawns: why he songs them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakespeare.
I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee:
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doff of inkle blue. Gay's Pastorals.
INKLING. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklin- ken, to sound within. This sense is still retained in Scotland:
as, I heard not an inkling.] Hint; whisper; intimation.
Our business is not unknown to the senate: they have had inkling what we intend to do, which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon's New Atlantis.
They had some inkling of secret messages between the merquis of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon, b. viii.
Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estrange's Fables.
INKMAKER. n. f. [ink and maker.] He who makes ink.
INKY. adj. [from ink.]
1. Consisting of ink.
England bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is bound in with shame,
With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds. Shakespeare.
2. Resembling ink.
The darkness of the liquor presently began to be discoloured, and grow pretty clear and transparent, losing its inky blackness. Boyle on Colours.
3. Black as ink.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
That can denote me truly. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
INLAND. adj. [in and land.] Interior; lying remote from the sea.
In this wide inland sea, that hight by name,
The idle lake, my wand'ring ship I row. Fairy Queen.
Goodly laws, like little inland seas, will carry even ships upon their waters. Spenser's State of Ireland.
An old religious uncle of mine was, in his youth, an in- land man. Shakespeare's As you like it.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excise, or inland duty. Swift.
INLAND. n. f. Interior or midland parts.
Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the Inland. Spenser.
They of those marches shall defend
Our inland from the pilferring borderers. Shakespeare.
The rest were all
Far to th' inland retir'd, about the walls
Of Pandæmonium. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
INLANDER. n. f. [from inland.] Dweller remote from the sea.
The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters of this island. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi.
To INLA'PIDATE. v. a. [in and lapido, Lat.] To make stoney;
to turn to stone.
Some natural spring waters will inlapidate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a kind of gravelly stone. Bacon.
To INLA'Y. v. a. [in and lay.]
1. To diversify with different bodies inserted into the ground or substratum.

They are worthy
To inlay heav'n with stars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Look, how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold. Shakespeare.
A saphire throne, inlaid with pure
Amber, and colours of the show'ry arch. Milton.
The timber bears a great price with the cabinet makers,
when large, for inlaying. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Here clouded canes 'midst heaps of toys are found,
And inlaid tweezer cases strow the ground. Gay.
2. To make variety by being inserted into bodies; to variegate.
Sea-girt isles;
That like to rich and various gems inlay
The unadorned bosom of the deep. Milton.
INLA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] Matter inlaid; wood formed to inlay.
Under foot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay,
Broider'd the ground. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
To INLA'W. v. a. [in and law.] To clear of outlawry or attainer.
It should be a great incongruity to have them to make laws, who themselves were not inlawed. Bacon's Henry VII.
INLET. n. f. [in and let.] Passage; place of ingress; entrance.
Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light, I couple together, because I find their dimensions brought under one.
Wotton.
She through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial oils till she reviv'd. Milton.
I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.
A fine bargain indeed; to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a streight shore. Bentley.
Inlets amongst broken lands and islands, rocks and shoals.
Ellis's Voyage.
INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love;
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakesp.
INLY. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.
Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Fa. Qu.
I've inly wept;
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
The stubborn only to destroy
These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd,
And said to me apart. Milton's Par. Reg. b. i.
The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
INMATE. n. f. [in and mate.]
Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowell.
So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve
Address'd his way. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryden's Aur.
INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.
'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakespeare.
Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.
Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or in- most, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.
He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves resound. Pope.
I got into the inmost court, and I applied my face to the windows. Gulliver's Travels.
INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.] A house of entertainment for travellers.
How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney, b. ii.
Palmer,

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal dooni
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come;
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.
Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Fairy Queen.
The West, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman was delivered. Shakespeare.
Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.
One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Locke.
2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.
Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
To INN. v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.
In thyself dwell;
Inn any where: continuance maketh hell. Donne.
To INN. v. a. To house; to put under cover.
He that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter:
all was inned at last into the king's barn. Bacon's Henry VII.
Mow clover or rye-grass, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.
INNA'TE. } adj. [inné, Fr. innatus, Latin.] Inborn; in-INNA'TED. } generate; natural; not superadded; not adsci-titious. It is applied to things as well as persons; but more properly to persons.
The Druinian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howel.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd. Dryden.
Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley's Serm.
INNA'TENESS. n. f. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.
INNA'VIGABLE. adj. [innavigabilis, Latin.] Not to be passed by failing.
If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake,
Receive my counsel. Dryden's Æn.
INNER. adj. [from in.] Interiour; not outward.
But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Fairy Queen.
This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.
The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew's Cosmol.
Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.
INNERMOST. adj. [from inner. It seems less proper than inmost.] Remotest from the outward part.
The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.
INNHO'LDER. n. f. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn;
an innkeeper.
INNINGS. n. f. Lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.
INNKE'EPER. n. f. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.
Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper. Taylor's Rule of holy living.
A factious innkeeper, in the reign of Henry VII. was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.
We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions. Addison.
INNOCENCE. } n. f. [innocence, French; innocentia, Latin.]
INNOCENCY. }
1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.
Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.
What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conscience of its own innocence and integrity. Tillotson.
2. Freedom from guilt imputed.
It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'ft part black. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakespeare. H. IV.
3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.
The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.
I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shakespeare.
INNOCENT. adj. [innocent, French; innocens, Latin.]
1. Pure from mischief.
Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appease an angry god. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Wreck on innocent frail man his loss. Milton.
2. Free from any particular guilt.
Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.
3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.
The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.
INNOCENT. n. f.
1. One free from guilt or harm.
So pure an innocent as that same lamb. Fairy Queen.
Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakespeare. Othello.
If murth'ring innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
2. A natural; an idiot.
Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hooker.
INNOCENTLY. adv. [from innocent.]
1. Without guilt.
The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly. South's Sermons.
2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.
3. Without hurt.
Balls at his feet fell innocently dead. Cowley.
INNO'CUOUS. adj. [innocuus, Latin.] Harmless in effects.
The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew's Cosmol.
INNO'CUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuous.] Without mischievous effects.
Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INNO'CUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuous.] Harmlessness.
The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby on Bodies.
To INNOVATE. v. a. [innover, French; innovo, Latin.]
1. To bring in something not known before.
Time indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon.
Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.
Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done;
And innovates some act 'till then unknown. Dryden.
Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry;
every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.
2. To change by introducing novelties.
From his attempts upon the civil power he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South's Sermons.
INNOVA'TION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.
The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.
It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon's Essays.
Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.
INNOVA'TOR. n. f. [innovateur, French, from innovate.]
1. An introducer of novelties.
I attach thee as a traiterous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Every medicine is an innovation; and he that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon's Essays.
2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.
He counsels him to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South's Sermons.
INNOXIOUS.

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of mens heads and horses manes. Digby.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innaxious qualities. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Sent by the better genius of the night,

Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,

The meteor fits.

Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,

The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.

Pope.

INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.] Harmlessly.

Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown's Vulgar Err.

INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUE'NDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,

Your hints that Stella is no chicken;

Your innuendo's, when you tell us,

That Stella loves to talk with fellows.

Swift.

INNU'MERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways

You have for dignities.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,

Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs

Hide me where I may never see them more.

Milton.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts.

Locke.

INNU'MERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNU'MEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little chearing,

In this close dungeon of innumeros boughs.

Milton.

I take the wood,

And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,

Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.

Pope's Odyssey.

TO INOCULATE. v. a. [inoculo, in and oculus, Latin.]

1. To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all

How to ingraft, how to inoculate.

May's Virg. Georg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,

To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate.

Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,

For tender plants t' inoculate.

Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,

Inoculate carnation.

Cleaveland.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some sound bass-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with bass-mat, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, sloping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out; but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Mil. er.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Herbel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbutn.

INOCULA'TOR. n. f. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's Hist. of Physick.

INO'DORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon's Natural History.

INO'DOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscuous, unactive, insipid. inodorous liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INOFFE'NSIVE. adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking.

Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Giving no pain; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, diverting their thoughts, or mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, 'till it be grown inoffensive to them. Loc.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

For drink the grape

She crushes, inoffensive most.

Milton.

With whate'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,

Thy inoffensive satires never bite.

Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,

Gives signs of gratulation.

Phillips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,

Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell. Milton's Parad. Lost.

INOFFE'NSIVELY. adv. [from inoffensive.] Without appearance of harm; without harm.

INOFFE'NSIVENESS. n. f. [from inoffensive.] Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

INOFFI'CIOUS. adj. [in and officious.] Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others.

INO'PINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat. inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INO'PORTU'NE. adj. [inopportunos, Latin.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INO'RDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Government of the Tongue.

INO'RDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people at first were wisely brought to acknowledge allegiance to the kings of England; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise

At last distemper'd, discontented thoughts;

Vain hopes, vain arms, inordinate desires,

Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride. Milton.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

INO'RDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Taylor.

INO'RDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINA'TION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lye from that intrinsic inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lye was absolutely and universally sinful. South's Sermons.

INORGA'NICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter. Locke.

TO INO'SCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Lat.] To unite by apposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched to the ball of the eye, and to the præcordia also in some measure, by inosculating with one of its nerves. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INOSCUA'TION. n. f. [from inosculate.] Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

INQUEST.

INQUEST. n. f. [enquête, French; inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them is given in?

Atterbury's Sermons.

2. [In law] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal, in our realm; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose, and as they bring in their verdict so judgment passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. For the inquest in criminal causes, see JURY.

Cowel.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science.

South's Sermons.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude.

Wotton.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position.

Wotton.

The youthful hero, with returning light,

Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night.

Pope's Odyssey.

TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquino, Latin.] To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinated their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes.

Brown.

INQUINA'TION. n. f. [inquinatio, Lat. from inquinare.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not.

Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquisition or inquest may be made.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [enquirer, French; inquirō, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion.

You have oft inquir'd

After the shepherd that complain'd of love.

Shakespeare.

We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.

Gen.

They began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

Lu. xxii. 23.

Acts ix. 11.

You sent Hadoram to king David, to inquire of his welfare.

Chron. xviii. 10.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the house.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgment.

South's Sermons.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;

The son inquires into his father's years.

Dryden.

Under their grateful shade Æneas sat;

His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,

And oft of winds inquir'd, and of the tide.

Dryd. Æn.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way.

Locke.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his family.

Swift.

2. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state:

He hears and judges each committed crime,

Enquires into the manner, place, and time.

Dryden's Æn.

TO INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out: as, he inquired the way.

2. To call; to name. Obsolete.

Canute had his portion from the rest,

The which he call'd Canutium, for his hire,

Now Cantium, which Kent we commonly inquire.

F. Qu.

INQUIRER. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers in what day of the month the world began?

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What's good doth open to th' inquirers stand,

And itself offers to th' accepting hand.

Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by muscles, nerves, and other like ligaments.

Glanv. Sceps.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine.

Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find,

That ev'ry insect of each different kind,

In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,

Organs involv'd and latent life displays.

Blackmore.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate.

Acts x. 17.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth.

Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free.

Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries.

Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete.

Locke.

Judgment or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause.

Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble.

Pf. ix. 12.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition.

Bacon's Natural History.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels.

Bacon's Hen. VII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every failing, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to.

Taylor.

By your good leave,

These men will be your judges: we must stand

The inquisition of their railery

On our condition.

Southern.

2. Examination; discussion.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out.

2 Esch. xxiii.

3. [In law.] A manner of proceeding in matters criminal, by the office of the judge.

Cowel.

4. The court established in some countries subject to the pope for the detection of heresy.

One kiss of her's, and but eighteen words,

Put quite down the Spanish inquisition.

Corbet.

INQUISITIVE. adj. [inquisitus, Latin.] Curious; busy in search; active to pry into any thing. With about, after, into, or of, and sometimes into.

My boy at eighteen years became inquisitive

After his brother.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

This idleness, together with fear of imminent mischiefs, have been the cause that the Irish were ever the most inquisitive people after news of any nation in the world.

Davies.

He is not inquisitive into the reasonableness of indifferent and innocent commands.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

It can be no duty to write his heart upon his forehead, and to give all the inquisitive and malicious world a survey of those thoughts, which is the prerogative of God only to know.

South.

His old shaking fire,

Inquisitive of fights, still longs in vain

To find him in the number of the slain.

Dryden's Jew.

Thou, what befits the new lord-mayor,

And what the Gallick arms will do,

Art anxiously inquisitive to know.

Dryden.

A Dutch ambassador, entertaining the king of Siam with the particularities of Holland, which he was inquisitive after, told him that the water would, in cold weather, be so hard that men walked upon it.

Locke.

The whole neighbourhood grew inquisitive after my name and character.

Addison's Spectator.

A wise man is not inquisitive about things impertinent.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

They cannot bear with the impertinent questions of a young inquisitive and sprightly genius.

Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

INQUISITIVELY. adv. [from inquisitive.] With curiosity; with narrow scrutiny.

INQUISITIVENESS. n. f. [from inquisitive.] Curiosity; diligence to pry into things hidden.

Though he thought inquisitiveness an uncomely guest, he could not but ask who she was.

Sidney.

Heights that scorn our prospect, and depths in which reason will never touch the bottom, yet surely the pleasure arising from thence is great and noble; for as much as they afford perpetual matter to the inquisitiveness of human reason, and so are large enough for it to take its full scopes and range in.

South.

Providence, delivering great conclusions to us, designed to excite our curiosity and inquisitiveness after the methods by which things were brought to pass.

Burnet.

Curiosity in children nature has provided, to remove that ignorance they were born with; which, without this busy inquisitiveness, will make them dull.

Locke.

INQUISITOR.

INQUI'SITOR. n. f. [inquisitor, Latin; inquisiteur, French.]

1. One who examines judicially.

In these particulars I have played myself the inquisitor, and find nothing contrary to religion or manners, but rather medicinal. Bacon's Essays.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes with his assessors hears. Dryden.

2. An officer in the popish courts of inquisition.

TO INRA'IL. v. a. [in and rail.] To inclose with rails.

In things indifferent, what the whole church doth think convenient for the whole, the same if any part do wilfully violate, it may be reformed and inrailed again, by that general authority whereunto each particular is subject. Hooker.

Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An inrailed column rears its lofty head;
Here to sev'n streets sev'n dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray. Gay.

INROAD. n. f. [in and road.] Incurfion; sudden and desultory invasion.

Many hot inroads

They make in Italy. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
From Scotland we have had in former times some alarms, and inroads into the northern parts of this kingdom. Bacon.

By proof we feel

Our pow'r sufficient to disturb his heav'n,
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible his fatal throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The loss of Shrewsbury expos'd all North Wales to the daily inroads of the enemy. Clarendon.

The country open lay without defence;

For poets frequent inroads there had made. Dryden.

INSA'NABLE. adj. [insanabilis, Latin.] Incurable; irremediable.

INSA'NE. adj. [insanus, Latin.] Mad; making mad.

Were such things here as we do speak about?

Or have we eaten of the insane root,

That takes the reason prisoner? Shakefp. Macbeth.

INSA'TIABLE. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin; insatiable, French.] Greedy beyond measure; greedy so as not to be satisfied.

INSA'TIABLENESS. n. f. [from insatiable.] Greediness not to be appeased.

Some mens hydropick insatiableness had learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

INSA'TIABLY. adv. [from insatiable.] With greediness not to be appeased.

They were extremely ambitious, and insatiably covetous;
and therefore no impression, from argument or miracles, could reach them. South.

INSA'TIATE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy so as not to be satisfied.

When my mother went with child

Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,

My princely father, then had wars in France. Shak. R. III.

Insatiate to pursue

Vain war with heav'n. Milton.

Too oft has pride,

And hellish discord, and insatiate thirst
Of others rights, our quiet discompos'd. Phillips.

INSATISFACTION. n. f. [in and satisfaction.] Want; unsatisfied state.

It is a profound contemplation in nature, to consider of the emptiness or insatisfaction of several bodies, and of their appetite to take in others. Bacon's Natural History.

INSA'TURABLE. adj. [insaturabilis, Lat.] Not to be glutted; not to be filled.

TO INSCRI'BE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscrire, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something.

In all you writ to Rome, or else

To foreign princes, ego & rex meus

Was still inscrib'd. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Connatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true; and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might evince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Ye weeping loves! the stream with myrtles hide,

And with your golden darts, now useless grown,

Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing: as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.

One ode, which pleas'd me in the reading, I have attempted to translate in Pindarick verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.

In the circle inscribe a square. Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRIPTION. n. f. [inscription, Fr. inscriptio, Latin.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This avarice of praise in time to come,

Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

2. Title.

Joubertus by the same title led our expectation, whereby we reaped no advantage, it answering scarce at all the promise of the inscription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. [In law.] Is an obligation made in writing, whereby the accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the party accused in his accusatory libel, as the defendant himself ought to suffer, if the same be proved. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Consignment of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRU'TABLE. adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat. inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or study.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a weather-cock on a steeple. Shak. Two Gent. of Verona.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy. Bacon.

O how inscrutable! his equity

Twins with his power. Sandys.

Hereunto they have recourse as unto the oracle of life, the great determinator of virginity, conception, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown's Vulg. Error.

We should contemplate reverently the works of nature and grace, the inscrutable ways of providence, and all the wonderful methods of God's dealing with men. Atterbury.

TO INSCU'LP. v. a. [insculpo, Latin.] To engrave; to cut.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel

Stamp'd in gold, but that insculpt upon. Shakespeare.

INSCU'LPTURE. n. f. [from in and sculpture] Any thing engraved.

Timon is dead,

Entomb'd upon the very hem o' th' sea;

And on the grave-stone this insculpture, which

With wax I brought away. Shakefp. Timon.

It was usual to wear rings on either hand; but when precious gems and rich insculptures were added, the custom of wearing them was translated unto the left. Brown.

TO INSE'AM. v. a. [in and seam.] To impress or mark by a seam or cicatrix.

Deep o'er his knee inseam'd remain'd the scar. Pope.

INSECT. n. f. [insecta, Latin.]

1. Insects may be considered together as one great tribe of animals: they are called insects from a separation in the middle of their bodies, whereby they are cut into two parts, which are joined together by a small ligature, as we see in wasps and common flies. Locke.

Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton.

2. Any thing small or contemptible.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd

The kings, and awful fathers of mankind;

And some with whom compar'd, your insect tribes

Are but the beings of a Summer's day,

Have held the scale of empire. Thomson's Spring.

INSECTA'TOR. n. f. [from insector, Latin.] One that persecutes or harasses with pursuit. Diet.

INSECTILE. adj. [from insect.] Having the nature of insects.

Insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Bac.

INSECTOLOGER. n. f. [insect and λόγος.] One who studies or describes insects.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologists, of the ichneumon-fly kind. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INSECURE. adj. [in and secure.]

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Tillotson's Serm.

2. Not safe.

INSECURITY. n. f. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of reasonable confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contrition, sorrow, and resolution of amendment. Hammond.

INSEMINA'TION. n. f. [infemination, Fr. infemina, Lat.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSECUTION. n. f. [insecution, Fr. insecutio, Lat.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel

Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,

With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman's Iliads.

INSE'NSATE. adj. [insense, French; insensato, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobates; obdurate insensate creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,

As their own ruin on themselves t' invite,

Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,

And with blindness internal struck. Milton's Agonistes.

INSENSIBILITY.

INSENSIBILITY. n. f. [insensibilité, French, from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanv.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSENSIBLE. adj. [insensible, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is honour? a word. What is that word honour? air; a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead: but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shakesp.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opt.

2. Slowly gradual.

They fall away,
And languish with insensible decay. Dryden.

3. Void of feeling either mental or corporal.

I thought

I then was passing to my former state
Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve. Milton.

4. Void of emotion or affection.

You grow insensible to the conveniency of riches, the delights of honour and praise. Temple.

You render mankind insensible to their beauties, and have destroyed the empire of love. Dryden.

INSENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from insensible.] Absence of perception; inability to perceive.

The insensibleness of the pain proceeds rather from the relaxation of the nerves than their obstruction. Ray.

INSENSIBLY. adv. [from insensible.]

1. Imperceptibly; in such a manner as is not discovered by the senses.

The planet earth, so steadfast though she seem,
Insensibly three different motions moves. Milt. Par. Lost.

The hills rise insensibly, and leave the eye a vast uninterrupted prospect. Addison on Italy.

2. By slow degrees.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature, for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insitiency of a camel for travelling in deserts. Grew.

INSITION. n. f. [insitio, Latin.] The insertion or ingraftment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage or agriculture, no pruning or lopping, grafting or insition. Ray on the Creation.

INSISTURE. n. f. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify constancy or regularity.

The heav'ns themselves, the planets, and the centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakespeare.

TO INSNA'RE. v. a. [in and snare.]

1. To intrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strewst thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web insnareth thee about. Shakesp. R. III.
She insnar'd

Mankind with her fair looks. Milton.

By long experience Durfey may no doubt
Insna're a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;
Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish'd!—because the man attempts to write. Fenton.

2. To intangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which in a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insnared the judgments both of sundry good and of some well learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded. Hooker.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be insnared. Job xxxiv. 30.

INSNA'RER. n. f. [from insna're.] He that insnares.

INSOCIABLE. adj. [insociable, French; insociabilis, Latin.]

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row must be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insociable. Wotton's Architecture.

INSOBRIETY. n. f. [in and sobriety.] Drunkenness; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, if he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores. Decay of Piety.

TO INSOLATE. v. a. [insolere, Latin.] To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLATION. n. f. [insolation, French, from insolate.] Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour: if it be sunned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INSOLENCE. } n. f. [insolence, Fr. insolentia, Latin.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those few people that remained. Spenser on Ireland.

Such a nature,

Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded

Under Cominius.

Shakespeare.

Flown with insolence and wine.

Milton.

Publick judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and stays their proud waves.

Tillotson.

The steady tyrant man,

Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chace.

Thomson.

The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power.

Broome.

TO INSOLENCY. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and assaulted.

King Charles.

INSOLENT. adj. [insolent, Fr. insolens, Latin.] Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters.

Atterbury.

INSOLENTLY. adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

What I must disprove,

He insolently talk'd to me of love.

Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat,

Not senates, insolently loud,

Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,

Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Dryden.

Briant, being naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, and more like a criminal than a prisoner of war.

Addison's Guardian.

INSOLVABLE. adj. [insolvable, Fr. in and solvere.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling inquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinites, indivisibles and incommensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. That cannot be paid.

INSOLUBLE. adj. [insoluble, French; insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved.

Admit this, and what shall the Scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair.

Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solvere, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By publick declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit.

Howel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life.

Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts.

Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space.

Smart.

INSOLVENCY. n. f. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts.

INSOMUCH. conj. [in so much.] So that; to such a degree that.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language.

Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amended made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do.

Bacon's Natural History.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it.

L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath.

Addison's Guardian.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspicio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspection, French; inspectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,

Consider every creature.

Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it.

South's Sermons.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds from the publick view, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection.

Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God; and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us.

Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence.

Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,

Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness.

In regions mild of calm and serene air.

Milton.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous steams.

Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. f. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration.

Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superiour power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.

—How can she then call us by our names,

Unless it be by inspiration?

Shak. Comedy of Errours.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations.

Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

We to his high inspiration owe,

That what was done before the flood we know.

Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success

Declares was inspiration, and not guess.

Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired.

Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. n. [inspire, Latin; inspirer, Fr.] To draw in the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies.

Walton.

TO INSPI'RE. v. a.

1. To breathe into; to infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;

But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Addison.

3. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country.

Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;

Now like a chain around her neck he rides.

Dryden.

INSPIRER. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspiser of mankind, be all honour.

Derham.

TO INSPIRIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelistical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant for us to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury's Sermons.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope's Preface to the Iliads.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm ev'ry thought; inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

TO INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and spissus, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

This oil farther inspissated by evaporation, turns by degrees into balm. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspissate.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspissation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilitas, from instabilis, French; instabilis, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; since such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 25.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installer, French, in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. The seat in which one is installed.

Search Windsor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour;
Each fair instalment, coat and several crest
With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shakespeare.

INSTANCE. } n. f. [instance, French.]

INSTANCY. } n. f. [instance, French.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker, b. i.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument. Not now in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love. Shakespeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident

So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shakespeare.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury's Sermons.

Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat. Bentley's Sermons.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the first, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

TO INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamor. Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excelled the ancients; and I would instance in Shakespeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter sort. Dryden's Juvenal.

INSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr. instans, Latin.]

Which crave the instant use. Shakesp. King Lear.

Th' instant stroke of death denounc'd to day,
Remov'd far off. Milton.

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt see;
Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;
Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Prior.

3. Quick; without delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm. Milton.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,
And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.

INSTANT. n. f. [instant, French.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession. Locke.

There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being. Hooker, b. v.

I can at any unseasonable instant of the night appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window. Shakespeare.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,
And not in instants through all places stride;

But she is nigh and far, beneath, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Davies.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in one single point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with it. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is used in low and commercial language for a day of the present or current month.

On the twentieth instant it is my intention to erect a lion's head. Addison's Guard. N<sup>o</sup>. 98.

INSTINCT. adj. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Lat.] Moved; animated. A word not in use.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound

The chariot of paternal deity,

Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,

Itself instict with spirit, but convoy'd

By four cherubick shapes.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

INSTINCT. n. f. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Lat.] This word had its accent formerly on the last syllable.] Desire or aversion acting in the mind without the intervention of reason or deliberation; the power determining the will of brutes.

In him they fear your highness' death;

And mere instinct of love and loyalty

Makes them thus forward in his banishment.

Shakespeare.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct: I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,

Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,

To have guided me aright.

Nature first pointed out my Portius to me;

And easily taught me by her secret force

To love thy person; e'er I knew thy merit;

Till what was instinct grew up into friendship.

Addison.

The philosopher avers,

That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs:

Instinct and reason how shall we divide?

Prior.

Reason serves when press'd;

But honest instinct comes a volunteer.

Pope.

INSTINCTED. adj. [instinctus, Lat.] Impressed as an animating power. This, neither musical nor proper, was perhaps introduced by Bentley.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instincted through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer and a worse editor could not hinder from shining forth.

Bentley's Preface to Milton.

INSTINCTIVE. adj. [from instinct.] Acting without the application of choice of reason; rising in the mind without apparent cause.

Rais'd

By quick instinctive motion, up I sprung,

As thitherward endeavouring.

You have ten thousand instructors in Christ.

1 Cor. iv. 15.

After the flood arts to Chaldea fell,

The father of the faithful there did dwell,

Who both their parent and instructor was.

Denham.

O thou, who future things can'st represent

As present, heav'nly instructor!

Poets, the first instructors of mankind,

Brought all things to their native proper use.

They see how they are beset on every side, not only with temptations, but instructors to vice.

We have precepts of duty given us by our instructors.

Several instructors were disposed among this little helpless people.

Addison's Guard. N<sup>o</sup>. 105.

INSTRUCTION. n. f. [instruction, French; from instruct.]

1. The act of teaching; information.

It lies on you to speak,

Not by your own instruction, nor by any matter

Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words

As are rooted in your tongue.

We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages, for those discoveries and discourses they have left behind them for our instruction.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Locke.

2. Precepts conveying knowledge.

Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to receive my words?

Jer. xxxv.

On ev'ry thorn delightful wisdom grows,

In ev'ry stream a sweet instruction flows;

But some untaught o'erhear the whisper'ring rill,

In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still.

Young.

3. Authoritative information; mandate.

See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou can'st;

Anon I'll give thee more instruction.

Shakespeare.

INSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from instruct; instructif, French.] Conveying knowledge.

With variety of instructive expressions by speech man alone is endowed.

I discern some excellent final causes of conjunction of body and soul; but the instrumental I know not, nor what invisible bands and fetters unite them together.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. Acting to some end; contributing to some purpose; helpful: used of persons and things.

The presbyterian merit is of little weight, when they allege themselves instrumental towards the restoration.

Swift.

3. Consisting not of voices but instruments.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental musick, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason, wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony and not the other.

Hooker, b. v.

4. Produced by instruments; not vocal.

Oft in bands,

While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,

With heav'nly touch of instrumental sounds

In full harmonious number join'd, their songs

Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heav'n.

Sweet voices, mix'd with instrumental sounds,

Ascend the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds.

Dryden.

INSTRUMENTALITY. n. f. [from instrumental.] Subordinate agency; agency of any thing as means to an end.

Those natural and involuntary actings are not done by deliberation and formal command, yet they are done by the virtue, energy, and influx of the soul, and the instrumentality of the spirits.

Hale's Original of Mankind.

INSTRUMENTALLY. adv. [from instrumental.] In the nature of an instrument; as means to an end.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain,

But after ten from nuptial rites refrain. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Act of insolence or contempt.

Take the sentence seriously, because raileries are an insult on the unfortunate. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To INSULT. v. a. [insulter, Fr. insulto, Lat.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was glutted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam. Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,
Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,
Yet still they find a future task remain,
To turn the soil. Dryden's Virgil.

INSULTER. n. f. [from insult.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the merciless insulter man,
Man, who rejoices in our sex's weakness,
Shall pity thee. Rowe's Jane Shore.

INSULTINGLY. adv. [from insulting.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast,
Gave me my life, and told me what it cost. Dryden.

INSUPERABILITY. n. f. [from insuperable.] The quality of being invincible.

INSUPERABLE. adj. [insuperabilis, Latin.] Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it. Digby on Bodies.

Much might be done would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience. Ray on the Creation.

And middle natures how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line. Pope's Essay on Man.

INSUPERABLENESS. n. f. [from insuperable.] Invincibleness; impossibility to be surmounted.

INSUPERABLY. adv. [from insuperable.] Invincibly; insurmountably.

Between the grain and the vein of a diamond there is this difference, that the former furthers, the latter, being so insuperably hard, hinders the splitting of it. Grew's Museum.

INSUPPORTABLE. adj. [insupportable, French; in and supportable.] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness, and multiplied according to the number of the persons that hear. South.

The baser the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence. L'Estrange's Fables.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man: we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being. Dryden.

To those that dwell under or near the Equator, this Spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable Summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the Poles, a perpetual Spring will not do their business. Bentley's Sermons.

INSUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from insupportable.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then fell she to so pitiful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procured his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering. Sidney.

INSUPPORTABLY. adv. [from insupportable.] Beyond endurance.

But safest he who stood aloof,

When insupportably his foot advanc'd,

In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,

Spurn'd them to death by troops. Milton's Agonistes.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinced me, that the poem was insupportably too long. Dryden.

INSURMOUNTABLE. adj. [insurmountable, Fr. in and surmountable.] Insuperable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, 'till I can make simplicity and variety the same. Locke.

3. Not fractional; not broken into fractions.

INTEGRAL. n. f. The whole made up of parts.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, nerves, and integrals of the human body. Hale.

Consider the infinite complications and combinations of several concurrences to the constitution and operation of almost every integral in nature. Hale.

A mathematical whole is better called integral, when the several parts, which make up the whole, are distinct, and each may subsist apart. Watts.

INTEGRITY. n. f. [intégrité, Fr. integritas, from integer, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorruptedness.

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it. Shakesp. Coriol.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts

To thy good truth and honour. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.

The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterate state.

Language continued long in its purity and integrity. Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.

Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action. Braome.

INTEGUMENT. n. f. [integumentum, intego, Lat.] Any thing that covers or envelops another.

He could no more live without his frize-coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

INTELLECT. n. f. [intellect, Fr. intellectus, Lat.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,

All intellect, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South's Sermons.

INTELLECTION. n. f. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Latin.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanv.

A determinate intellection of the modes of being, never hinted by the senses, can realize chimeras. Glanv. Scep.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

INTELLECTIVE. adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellect.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanv.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logick is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,

Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,

The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,

And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose,

Though full of pain, this intellectual being,

Those thoughts that wander through eternity,

To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,

In the wide womb of uncreated night,

Devoid of sense and motion? Milton's Parad. Lost.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband not nigh,

Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanv. Scep.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning preferences. Glanv.

INTELLIGENCE. } n. f. [intelligence, French; intelligentia,
INTELLIGENCY. } Latin.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

It was perceived there had not been in the catholicks, either at Armenia or at Seleucia, so much foresight as to provide that true intelligence might pass between them of what was done. Hooker, b. v.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of door!

A most intelligency bawd! Shakespeare.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also in charge to advertise continually what they found. Bacon's H. VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the passages

Be well secur'd, that no intelligence

May pass between the prince and them. Denham's Sophy.

Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berosus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Bentley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligencies, and by their favour for that of the supreme God. Stillington.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Collier.

Satan, appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun circumvented him even in his own province. Dryden.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded hideously,

They think to be chief praise of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,

Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie. Spenser.

INTELLIGENCER. n. f. [from intelligence.] One who sends or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between parties.

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable. Sidney.

Who hath not heard it spoken

How deep you were within the books of heav'n?

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;

The very opener and intelligencer

Between the grace and sanctities of heav'n,

And our dull workings. Shakesp. Henry IV.

If they had instructions to that purpose, they might be the best intelligencers to the king of the true state of his whole kingdom. Bacon.

They are the best sort of intelligencers; for they have a way into the inmost closets of princes. Howe.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers, who make them acquainted with the conversation of the whole kingdom. Spektator.

them. Gen. xl. 22.

Pharaoh told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto him. Gen. xli. 8.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, and understanding, inter- preting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

Hear his sighs, though mute!
Unskillful with what words to pray, let me
Interpret for him. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

INTERPRETABLE. adj. [from interpret.] Capable of being expounded or deciphered.

No man's face is actionable: these singularities are inter- pretable from more innocent causes. Collier.

INTERPRETATION. n. f. [interpretation, Fr. interpretatio, Lat.
from interpret.]

1. The act of interpreting; explanation.

This is a poor epitome of your's,
Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakesp. H. IV.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; exposition.

If it be obscure or uncertain what they meant, charity, I hope, constraineth no man, which standeth doubtful of their minds, to lean to the hardest and worst interpretation that their words can carry. Hooker.

The primitive Christians knew how the Jews, who preceded our Saviour, interpreted these predictions, and the marks by which the Messiah would be discovered; and how the Jewish doctors, who succeeded him, deviated from the interpreta- tions of their forefathers. Addison.

3. The power of explaining.

We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

INTERPRETATIVE. adj. [from interpret.] Collected by interpretation.

Though the creed apostolick were sufficient, yet when the church hath erected that additional bulwork against hereticks, the rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpre- tative siding with heresies. Hammond.

INTERPRETATIVELY. adv. [from interpretative.] As may be collected by interpretation.

By this provision the Almighty interpretatively speaks to him in this manner: I have now placed thee in a well furnished world. Ray on the Creation.

INTERPRETER. n. f. [interprete, Fr. interpretes, Latin.]

1. An explainer; an expositor; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
For our best act. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mass, and so it is understood by inter- preters, both Hebrew and Christian. Burnet.

We think most mens actions to be the interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.

Nor word for word be careful to transfer,
With the same faith as an interpreter. Fanshawe.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

INTERSTICE. n. f. [interstitium, Lat. interspace, Lat.]

1. Space between one thing and another.

The sun shining through a large prism upon a comb placed immediately behind the prism, his light, which passed through the interspaces of the teeth fell upon a white paper: the breadths of the teeth were equal to their interspaces, and seven teeth together with their interspaces took up an inch in breadth.

Newton's Opticks.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles which compose the fibres, so as to leave vacant interspaces in those places where they cohered before.

Arbutnot.

2. Time between one act and another.

I will point out the interspaces of time which ought to be between one citation and another.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

INTERSTICIAL. adj. [from interspace.] Containing interspaces.

In oiled papers, the interstitial division being actuated by the accession of oil, becometh more transparent.

Brown.

INTERTEXTURE. n. f. [intertexto, Latin.] Diversification of things mingled or woven one among another.

TO INTERTWINE. } v. a. [inter and twine, or twist.] To unite

TO INTERTWIST. } by twisting one in another.

Under some concurrence of shades,

Whose branching arms thick intertwin'd might shield
From dews and damps of night his shelter'd head.

Milton.

INTERVAL. n. f. [intervalle, Fr. intervallum, Latin.]

1. Space between places; interstice; vacuity; space unoccupied; void place; vacancy; vacant space.

With any obstacle let all the light be now stopped which passes through any one interval of the teeth, so that the range of colours which comes from thence may be taken away, and you will see the light of the rest of the ranges to be expanded into the place of the range taken away, and there to be coloured. Newton's Opticks.

2. Time passing between two assignable points.

The century and half following, to the end of the third Punick war, was a very busy period at Rome; the intervals between every war being so short. Swift.

3. Remission of a delirium or distemper.

Though he had a long illness, considering the great heat with which it raged, yet his intervals of sense being few and short, left but little room for the offices of devotion. Atterb.

TO INTERVENE. v. n. [intervenio, Lat. intervenir, Fr.] To come between things or persons; to be intercepted; to make intervals.

While so near each other thus all day

Our task we chuse, what wonder, if so near,
Looks intervene, and smiles. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Esteem the danger of an action, and the possibilities of miscarriage, and every cross accident that can intervene, to be either a mercy on God's part, or a fault on ours. Taylor.

INTERVENE. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposition, or perhaps interview. A word out of use.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an intervene of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they swayed. Wotton.

INTERVENIENT. adj. [intervenient, Lat. intervenient, French.] Intercedent; interposed; passing between.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two bemolls or half notes. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 104.

Many arts were used to discuss new affection: all which notwithstanding, for I omit things intervenient, there is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to be sworn his servant. Wotton.

INTERVENTION. n. f. [intervention, Fr. interventio, Latin.]

1. Agency between persons.

God will judge the world in righteousness by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the judge of the world. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Agency between antecedents and consecutives.

In the dispensation of God's mercies to the world, some things he does by himself, others by the intervention of natural means, and by the mediation of such instruments as he has appointed. L'Estrange.

3. Interposition; the state of being interposed.

Sound is shut out by the intervention of that lax membrane, and not suffered to pass into the inward ear. Holder.

TO INTERVERT. v. a. [interverto, Lat.] To turn to another course.

The duke interverted the bargain, and gave the poor widow of Erpenius for the books five hundred pounds. Wotton.

INTERVIEW. n. f. [entrevue, French.] Mutual sight; sight of each other. It is commonly used for a formal and appointed meeting or conference.

The day will come, when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love shew ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt. Hooker.

His fears were, that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Such happy interview, and fair event
Of love, and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flow'rs,
And charming symphonies, attach'd the heart
Of Adam. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

TO INTERVOLVE. v. a. [intervolve, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mystical dance! which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels
Resembles nearest; mazes intricate,
Eccentric, intervolv'd, yet regular,
Then most, when most irregular, they seem. Milton.

TO INTERWEAVE. v. a. preter. interwove, part. pass. interwoven, interwove, or interweaved. [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in a regular texture; to intermingle.

Then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

Words interwove with sighs found out their way. Milton.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

None
Can say here nature ends, and art begins,
But mixt like th' elements, and born like twins,

So interweav'd, so like, so much the same:

None, this mere nature, that mere art can name. Denham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden.
He so interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing falacy upon us. Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. Addison's Spect.

It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower-garden, which lie so mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Spektat.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire; interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift's Miscel.
TO INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,

What tyrants and their subjects interwish,

All ill fall on that man. Donne.

INTESTABLE. adj. [intestabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and intestable both actively and passively. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INTESTATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without will.

Why should calamity be full of words?

—Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys,

Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakespeare. Richard III.

Present punishment pursues his maw,

When surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,

He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,

Repletions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden's Juvenal.

INTESTINAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder. Arbuth.

INTESTINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our distempered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us. Duppa.

Intestine war no more our passions wage,

Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage. Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,

And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

A wooden jack, which had almost Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,

A sudden alteration feels,

Increas'd by new intestine wheels. Swift's Miscel.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakespeare: perhaps for mortal and intestine should be read mortal interne-cine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars

'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,

It hath in solemn synods been decreed,

T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakespeare.

But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,

To these intestine discords put an end. Dryden's Ovid.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,

A dreadful series of intestine wars,

Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

INTESTINE. n. f. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot on Diet.

TO INTHRALL. v. a. [in and thrall.] To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight,

And will not any way dishonour me. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

The Turk has sought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthrall'd. Raleigh.

Authors to themselves in all

Both what they judge, and what they choose; for so

I form'd them free, and free they must remain

Till they inthrall themselves. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

She soothes, but never can inthrall my mind:

Why may not peace and love for once be join'd. Prior.

INTHRALMENT. n. f. [from inthrall.] Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim

His people from inthrallment, they return

With glory, and spoil, back to their promis'd land.

Milton's Par. Lost.

To

TO INTHRO'NE. v. a. [in and throne.] To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne.

One, chief, in gracious dignity intron'd,
Shines o'er the rest. Thomson's Summer, l. 395.

INTIMACY. n. f. [from intimate.] Close familiarity.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers's Sermons.

INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.]

1. Inmost; inward; intefine.

They knew not

That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on

The marriage. Milton's Agonist, l. 221.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South's Sermons.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.

United by this sympathetick bond,

You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.

INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue.

TO INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.]

To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man.

Addison's Cato.

INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.

The same œconomy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbuthnot.

2. Nearly; inseparably.

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spect. N°. 219.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMA'TION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.

INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mass; not being external, or on the surface; internal.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.

TO INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast,

Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIRE. n. f. [integer, Lat. entier, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.

INTIRENESS. n. f. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same:

You this intireness better may fulfil,

Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.

INTO. prep. [in and to.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the site it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.

2. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other mens sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,

When the mad people rise against the state,

To look them into duty; and command

An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden's Persius.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue. Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening and astonishing men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury's Sermons.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.

His awful presence did the croud surprize,

Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;

Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,

So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode,

Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broome.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree beyond endurance.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolerant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuth.

TO INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment finally had they for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed. Hooker, b. i.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,

That darkness does the face of earth intomb. Shakespeare.

Mighty hero's more majestic shades,

And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.

TO INTONATE. v. a. [intono, Lat.] To thunder. Diët.

INTONA'TION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering. Diët.

TO INTO'NE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tone; intonner, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

TO INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuth.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,

Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To

TO INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRACTION. n. f. [intra and tractio, Latin.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who loves us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iii.

INTRACTIONENESS. n. f. [from intractable.] Obstinate; perverseness.

INTRACTIONABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRANSITIVE. v. a. [intransitivus, Latin.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INTRANSMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

TO INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasured. Shakesp. Henry IV.

TO INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trancher, French.]

1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!

Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden's Aureng.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

2. To break with hollows.

His face

Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

3. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakesp.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle

Calm and intrepid in the very throat

Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

TO INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Gurr.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift's Miscel.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

TO INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsicus, Lat. intrinseque, French.]

This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrarily to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRINSECALLY.

INTRINSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley's Sermons.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsick; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd, The more shall its intrinsick worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsick value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers's Sermons.

INTRINSECATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain
Too intrinsecate 't' unloose. Shakesp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once unie. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduco, Lat. introduire, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Brpome.

3. To produce; to give occasion.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

INTRODUCER. n. f. [introducetur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Fr. introductio, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introducetif, French; from introduce.]

Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logick; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South's Sermons.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introducetus, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. f. [introgressio, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introit, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of publick devotions.

INTROMISSION. n. f. [intromissio, Latin.]

1. The act of sending in.

If fight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacham on Drawing.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

TO INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.] To lend in; to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton's Opt.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Latin.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVENIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introversient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INTRUDE. v. n. [intrudo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shakesp.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship

Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late

To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe's J. Shore.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Col. ii. 18.

TO INTRUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull-hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTRUDER. n. f. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

And the hounds

Should drive upon the new transformed limbs, Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shak. Titus Andronicus.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!

Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakespeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn

To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison's Freeholder.

INTRUSION. n. f. [intrusion, French; intrusio, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

It must raise more substantial superstructions, and fall upon very many excellent strains, which have been justled off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill

With loath'd intrusion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?

Were not my orders that I should be private? Addis. Cato.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Wake's Preparation for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

TO INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;

Intrust thy fortune to the pow'rs above. Dryden's Juven.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword

In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addis. Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intueor, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing. Used commonly of mental view; immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had surely passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible. Glanv. Scept.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,

By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of reason.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives

Discursive or intuitive.

Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his. Hook.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. n. f. [intumescence, French; intumescere, Lat.]

INTUMESCENCY. n. f. Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and at the same time making the like effort upon the earth, occasions an earthquake. Woodward's Nat. History.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgesco, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown's Vulgar Err.

INTUSE. n. f. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise.

Spenser.

TO INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist, or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To encompass by circling round it.

The vest and veil divine,

Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. Dryden.

TO INVAD. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance.

He will invade them with troops. Hab. iii. 16.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Knolles.

With dang'rous expedition they invade

Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

Thy race in times to come

Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Æn.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdr. xv. 16.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:

But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVADER. n. f. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety

In sharp contest of battle found no aid

Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire

Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham's Sophy.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;

Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,

To call the fair invader in;

My darling favourite inclination, too,

All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. f. [invalesco, Latin.] Strength; health; force. Dict.

INVALID. adj. [invalidus, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,

Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew

Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

TO INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falshood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALID. n. f. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,

With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,

Wish'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity; invalidité, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.

2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith it produced would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and variarus, Lat. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The rule of good and evil would not then appear uniform and invariable, but would seem different, according to mens different complexions and inclinations. Atterbury.

INVARIABLENESS. n. f. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVARIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him. Atterbury.

INVASION. n. f. [invasion, French; invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sa. xxx.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South's Sermons.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryd. Æn.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one intire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of an epidemical disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

INVA'SIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other mens possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gasping nations hated and obey'd,

Lords of the desarts that their swords had made. Arbutnot.

INVE'CTIVE. n. f. [invektive, Fr. invektiva, low Lat.] A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,

Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shakesp. H. VI.

Casting off the respect fit to be continued between kings, even when their blood is hottest, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's H. VII.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the world, for an invektive, 'tis certain that 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv. Dedication.

INVE'CTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive muse

Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVE'CTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invektively he pierceth through

The body of the country, city, court,

Yea and of this our life; swearing that we

Are meer usurpers, tyrants. Shakespeare.

TO INVE'IGH. v. a. [inveho, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbutnot.

INVE'IGHER. n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in a course of seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wiseman's Surgery.

TO INVE'IGLE. v. a. [inveigliare, Ital. Minshew; aveugler, or enaveugler, French, Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Dueffa, royal richly dight,

That easy was to inveigle weaker sight,

Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,

Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Fa. Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shakespeare.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,

To inveigle and invite th' unwary sence

Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton.

Both right able

T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spectator.

INVE'IGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

TO INVENT. v. a. [inventer, French; invenio, Latin.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,

The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spenser.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none

She could devise, and thousand ways invent

To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fa. Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of mischief. Amos vi. 5.

We may invent

With what more forcible we may offend

Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,

Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,

By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind,

Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.

The ship by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbutnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Susan. xliii.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,

With full as many signs of deadly hate,

As lean-fac'd envy in her lothsome cave. Shakespeare.

Hercules's meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawning of philosophy. Addison's Spectator.

4. To light on; to meet with.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:

Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,

Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser.

INVE'NTER. n. f. [from inventeur, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garth.

2. A forger.

INVE'NTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Fiction.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heaven of invention! Shakesp. H. V. Prol.

By improving what was writ before,

Invention labours less, but judgment more. Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Excogitation; act of producing something new.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre;

Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

4. Forgery.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing

Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers

With strange invention. Shakesp. Macbeth.

If thou can'st accuse,

Do it without invention suddenly. Shakesp. Henry VI.

5. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he

To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd

Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought impossible. Milton's Parad. Lost.

INVE'NTIVE. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.] Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients; having the power of fiction.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,

No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

That inventive head

Her fatal image from the temple drew,

The sleeping guardians of the castle slew. Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

INVENTOR. n. f. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,

Unmindful of their maker. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he

To be the inventor mis'd. Milton.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterb.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,

Fall'n on th' inventors heads. Shakesp. Hamlet.

INVENTORIALY. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

INVENTORY. n. f. [inventaire, French; inventarium, Latin.]

An account or catalogue of moveables.

I found,

Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,

The several parcels of his plate. Shakesp. H. VIII.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Whoe'er looks,

For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,

Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Museum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain. Spectator.

He gave me an inventory of her goods and estate. Spectator.

TO INVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd to my will. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Gov. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.] A female that invents.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame:

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVERSION. n. f. [inversion, Fr. inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon design, and a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

TO INVERT. v. a. [invert, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?

And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,

Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn? Waller.

Ask not the cause why fullen Spring

So long delays her flow'rs to bear,

And Winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;

By demonstration Ned can show it:

Happy, could Ned's inverted rule

Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to imbezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knolles's History of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landscape of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO INVEST. v. a. [investir, Fr. investio, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. When it has two accusatives it has in or with before the thing.

Their gesture sad,

Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,

Presented them unto the gazing moon,

So many horrid ghosts. Shakesp. Henry V.

Thou with a mantle didst invest

The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;

Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on

Thy choicest looks. Denham's Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarend.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atter.

3. To adorn; to grace.

Honour must,

Not accompanied, invest him only;

But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine

On all deserters. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakespeare.

Some great potentate,

Or of the thrones above; such majesty

Invests him coming. Milt. Parad. Lost.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government. Bacon.

5. To inclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

TO INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Latin.] To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holder of Speech.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought

Investigation calm, whose silent powers

Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories: I mean no more translations, but something domestick, fit for my own country. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh's Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. f. [in and vestment.] Dress; cloaths; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,

Not of that die which their investments shew. Shakesp. Ham.

You,

You, my lord archbishop,
 Whose see is by a civil peace maintained,
 Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
 Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
 Whose white investments figure innocence,
 The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
 Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
 Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
 Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shak. H. IV.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South's Sermons.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

To INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To harden or make obstinate by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into mens minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley's Sermons.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Lacke.

INVETERA'TION. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broome.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

To INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

I have lived in a reign when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, or giving them their proper course, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightsome and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. SpeEtator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by a principle of universal charity. Atterbury's Sermons.

Gentle warmth

Discloses well the earth's all teeming womb,

Invigorating tender seeds. Phillips.

INVIGORA'TION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in actual exercise, in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincib'e, French; invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakespeare.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley's Sermons.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;

And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done

Invincibly. Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Dec. of Piety.

INVIO'LABLE. adj. [invio'lab'le, French; inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep

This place invio'lab'le, and these from harm. Milt. Par. Lost.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade the invio'lab'le main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high

His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!

Invio'lab'le pow'rs! ador'd with dread,

Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Æn.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invio'lab'le. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of invio'lab'le amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,

As if they vow'd some league invio'lab'le. Shakesp. H. VI.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' invio'lab'le saints

In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire. Milton.

INVIO'LABLY. adv. [from invio'lab'le.] Without breach; without failure.

The true profession of Christianity invio'lab'ly engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat's Sermons.

Meer acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after invio'lab'ly yours. Dryden.

INVIO'LABE. adj. [invio'lab'le, Fr. invio'latus, Lat.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still invio'lab'le. Bacon's H. VII:

But let invio'lab'le truth be always dear

To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds

Nature has seal'd between us, which though I

Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd invio'lab'le:

I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy.

My love your claim invio'lab'le secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden's Aurengz.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,

His truth, like heav'n's, was kept invio'lab'le. Dryden.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,

And virtue invious ways can prove,

What may not he confide to do,

That brings both love and virtue too. Hudibras.

INVISI'BLITY. n. f. [invisibilit'e, Fr. from invisibile.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisib'ity. Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisibile, Fr. invisibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisibile that hurt me so;

And none invisibile, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaten sails,

Borne with th' invisibile and creeping wind,

Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shakesp. H. V.

'Tis

'Tis wonderful,

That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught,
Civility not seen from others.

Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

To us invisible, or dimly ſeen,
In theſe thy loweſt works.

Milton.

He that believes a God, believes ſuch a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a ſpirit, and conſequently that he is invisible, and cannot be ſeen.

It ſeems eaſier to make one's ſelf invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts viſible to me, which are not viſible to himſelf.

Locke.

INVI'SIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the fight.

Age by degrees inviſibly doth creep,

Nor do we ſeem to die, but fall aſleep.

Denham.

TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Latin.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and ſlimy extremity, whereby, upon a ſudden emiſ-ſion, it invifcates and intangleth thoſe inſects.

Brown.

INVITA'TION. n. f. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,

And ſoon the gracious invitation took.

Dryden.

INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Latin.] Uſing invitation; containing invitation.

TO INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, French.]

1. To bid; to aſk to any place, particularly to one's own houſe, with intreaty and complaiſance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyſelf.

Eccluf. i. 39.

He comes invited by a younger ſon.

Milton.

When much company is invited, then be as ſparing as poſſible of your coals.

Swift.

2. To allure; to perſuade.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of ſucceſs might invite ſome other choice.

Bacon.

Nor art thou ſuch

Created, or ſuch place haſt here to dwell,

As may not oft invite, though ſpirits of heav'n,

To viſit thee.

Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v.

The liberal contributions ſuch teachers met with, ſerved ſtill to invite more labourers into that work.

Decay of Piety.

Shady groves, that eaſy ſleep invite,

And after toilsome days a ſoft repoſe at night.

Dryd. Virgil.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To aſk or call to any thing pleaſing.

All things invite

To peaceful counſels.

with ſhades.

Diſt.

INU'NCTION. n. f. [inungo, inunctus, Latin.] The act of ſmearing or anointing.

The wiſe Author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and ſqueezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and cauſing their filaments to cohere.

Ray.

INUNDA'TION. n. f. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, ſays
Cowley, implies leſs than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,

That ſhe ſhould give her ſorrow ſo much ſway;

And in his wiſdom haſtes our marriage,

To ſtop the inundation of her tears.

Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

The ſame inundation was not paſt forty foot in moſt places;
ſo that although it deſtroyed man and beaſt generally, yet ſome few wild inhabitants of the woods eſcaped.

Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,

Broke up, ſhall heave the ocean to uſurp

Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation riſe

Above the higheſt hills.

Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xi.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is Winter unto the Ethiopians.

Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Your care about your banks infers a fear

Of threatening floods, and inundations near.

Dryden.

The hero next aſſail'd proud Doway's head,

And ſpite of confluent inundations ſpread

With unexampled valour did ſucceed.

Blackmore.

No ſwelling inundation hides the grounds,

But cryſtal currents glide within their bounds.

Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Iriſh, were utterly waſted.

Spencer.

TO INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Be't lawful, that I invoke thy gholt,

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne.

Shakeſ. Rich. III.

If Dagon be thy god,

Go to his temple, invoke his aid

With ſolemneſt devotion.

Milton's Agoniſts.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,

'Till vermin or the draff of ſervile food

Conſume me, and oft invoked death

Haſten the welcome end of all my pains.

Milton's Agoniſt.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer uſual to ſignify even all the ſer-vice that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cauſe, as I ſuppoſe, but to ſhew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either preſuppoſe or infer.

Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the aſſiſtance or preſence of any being.

My invocation is

Honeſt and fair, and in his miſtreſs' name.

Shakeſ.

The propoſition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line.

Waſe.

I will ſtrain myſelf to breath out this one invocation.

Howel.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities.

Addiſon on Italy.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, ſend.] A catalogue of the freight of a ſhip, or of the articles and price of goods ſent by a factor.

One peculiar nation to ſelect

From all the reſt, of whom to be invok'd.

Milton's P. Loſt.

The ſkilful bard,

Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo;

To make his hero and himſelf immortal.

Prior.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [involver, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

Leave a ſinged bottom all involv'd

With ſtench and ſmoke.

Milton.

No man could miſs his way to heaven for want of light; and yet ſo vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkneſs.

Decay of Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,

Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight.

Dryden.

2. To imply; to compriſe.

We cannot demonſtrate theſe things ſo as to ſhew that the contrary neceſſarily involves a contradiction.

Tilloſon.

Sin we ſhould hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the perſon which we ſhould not hate at all.

Sprat.

One death involves

Tyrants and ſlaves.

Thomſon's Summer.

5. To intangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is ſo far from helping at all, that it only ſerves the more to involve us in difficulties.

Locke.

As obſcure and imperfect ideas often involve our reaſon, ſo do dubious words puzzle mens reaſon.

Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their ſnaky folds.

Milton.

Syllogiſm is of neceſſary uſe, even to the lovers of truth;
to ſhew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved diſcourſes.

Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confuſedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve.

Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice;

taire*, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,

Involves a vaſt involuntary throng,

Who gently drawn, and ſtruggling leſs and leſs,

Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confeſs.

Dunciad, b. iv.

2. Not choſen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, conſequent to ſuch command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatſoever action is performed without ſuch a thought of the mind, is called involuntary.

Locke.

But

But why? ah tell me, ah too dear!

Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear.

Pope.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.

All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions.

Glanville's Sceps. c. 23.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how, sometimes found about the heads of children.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

TO INURE. v. a. [in and ure.]

1. To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

Because they insist so much, and so proudly insult thereon, we must a little inure their ears with hearing how others, whom they more regard, are in this case accustomed to use the self-same language with us.

Hooker, b. v.

If there might be added the right helps of true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgment, between men therewith inured, and that which now men are, as between men that are now and innocents.

Hooker, b. i. f. 6.

That it may no painful work endure,

It to strong labour can itself inure.

Hubberd's Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.

All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Good men are never so surpris'd as in the midst of their jollities, nor so fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the snare. South's Sermons.

With branches we the fanes adorn, and waste
In jollity the day ordain'd to be the last. Dryden's Æn.
My heart was filled with melancholy to see several dropping in the midst of mirth and jollity. Addison's Spectator.

JO'LLY. adj. [joli, French; jovialis, Latin.]

1. Gay; merry; airy; cheerful; lively; jovial.

Like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English. Shakespeare. King John.

O nightingale!
Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart do'st fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May. Milton.

All my griefs to this are jolly;
Nought so sad as melancholy. Burton.

Ev'n ghosts had learn'd to groan;
But free from punishment, as free from sin,
The shades liv'd jolly, and without a king. Dryd. Juven.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his easy couch at early day. Dryden.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves,
And with his jolly pipe delights the groves. Prior.

2. Plump; like one in high health.

He catches at an apple of Sodom, which though it may entertain his eye with a florid, jolly white and red, yet, upon the touch, it shall fill his hand only with stench and foulness. South.

To JOLT. v. n. [I know not whence derived.] To shake as a carriage on rough ground.

In such a contrivance every little unevenness of the ground will cause such a jolting of the chariot as to hinder the motion of its sails. Wilkins.

Violent motion, as jolting in a coach, may be used in this case. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A coach and six horses is the utmost exercise you can bear, and how glad would you be, if it could waft you in the air to avoid jolting. Swift to Gay.

To JOLT. v. a. To shake one as a carriage does.

JOLT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shock; violent agitation.
The symptoms are, bloody water upon a sudden jolt or violent motion. Arbuthnot on Diet.

The first jolt had like to have shaken me out; but afterwards the motion was easy. Gulliver's Travels.

JO'LTHEAD. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.

Fie on thee, jolthead, thou can'st not read. Shakespeare.

Had he been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolthead, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Grew.

JONQUILLE. n. f. [jonquille, French.] A species of daffodil. The flowers of this plant, of which there are single and double kinds, are greatly esteemed for their strong sweet scent, though few ladies can bear the smell of them, it being so powerful as to overcome their spirits. Miller.

Nor gradual bloom is wanting,
Nor hyacinths of purest virgin white,
Low bent and blushing inward; nor jonquilles
Of potent fragrance. Thomson's Spring.

JO'RDEN. n. f. [γῶν, stercus, and den, receptaculum.] A pot. They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberlye breeds fleas like a loach. Shak.

This China jorden let the chief o'ercome
Replenish, not ingloriously at home. Pope's Dunciad.

The copper-pot can boil milk, heat porridge, hold small-beer, or, in case of necessity, serve for a jorden. Swift.

JO'SEPH'S Flowers. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

To JO'STLE. v. a. [jouster, French.] To juggle; to rush against.

JOT. n. f. [ῥῶτα.] A point; a tittle; the least quantity assignable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait;
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fa. Queen.

Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopat.
Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heav'n. Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakespeare.

I argue not
Against heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up and steer Right onwards. Milton.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.
A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

JO'VIAL. adj. [jovial, French; jovialis, Latin.]

1. Under the influence of Jupiter.
The fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. Gay; airy; merry.

My lord, seek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests. Shakespeare. Macb.
Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Natural History.

His odes are some of them panegyric, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.

Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JO'VIALLY. adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

JO'VIALNESS. n. f. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

JO'UISANCE. n. f. [rejouissance, French.] Jollity; merriment; festivity.

Colin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,
As thou wert wont, songs of some jouisance;
Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

JO'URNAL. adj. [journale, French; giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.

Now 'gan the golden Phoebus for to steep
His fiery face in billows of the West,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Fa. Queen.

Ere twice the sun has made his journal greeting
To th' under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested. Shakespeare. Meas. for Measure.

So sick I am not, yet I am not well;
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die ere sick; so, please you, leave me:
Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom
Is breach of all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. f. [journal, French; giornale, Italian.]

1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.

Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate. Hayward on Edw. VI.
Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilcar. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Any paper published daily.

JO'URNALIST. n. f. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

JO'URNEY. n. f. [journée, French.]

1. The travel of a day.

When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton.

2. Travel by land; a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shakespeare. H. IV.
Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Passage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

JOY

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou dost thy radiant journies run,
Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen
The greatest prince, the brightest queen. Prior.
To JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakespeare.
We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said,
I will give it you. Numb. x. 29.
Make the two trumpets, that thou mayest use them for the journeying of the camps. Numb. x. 2.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.
I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open.
Bacon's Holy War.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wifeman's Surgery.
JO'URNEYMAN. n. f. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Cowel.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journey- men under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Addison.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the management of the young lord's business into his hands: in that case what must become of us and our families? We must starve or turn journeymen to old Lewis Baboon. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

JO'URNEYWORK. n. f. [journee, French, and work.] Work performed for hire.

See how your soldier wears his cage
Of iron, like the captive Turk,
And as the guerdon of his rage!
See how your glimmering peers do lurk,
Or at the best work journeywork. Cleaveland.

Did no committee fit, where he Might cut out journeywork for thee?
And set thee a task with subornation,
To stitch up sale and sequestration. Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journeywork to her neighbours. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

JOUST. n. f. [joust, French.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight.
It is now written less properly just.

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. ix.

To JOUST. v. n. [jouster, French.] To run in the tilt.
All who since

Joysted in Aspramont or Montalban. Milton.

JO'WLER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] A kind of hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]
Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jouters. Carew.

JOY. n. f. [joye, French; gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South's Sermons.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, io hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakespeare.

Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakespeare.

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dry.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you? Shakespeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakespeare's H. VI.

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii. 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Heb. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairf.
No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon's Essays.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ, that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Wotton.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slav'ry they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate; like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;

For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Shakespeare's Tit. Andr.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,

Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' usurper joy'd not long

His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

JOYANCE. n. f. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity.

Bring home with you the glory of her gain;

With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.

There him rests in riotous suffiance,

Of all his gladfulness and kingly jo,ance. Spenser.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

My soul shall be joyful in my God. Is. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:

With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,

Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

JO'YFULLY. adj. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,

Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,

And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shakespeare's H. V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,

Or sooner understood the sign to flee:

With such alacrity they bore away,

As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JO'YFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deutr.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;

For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakespeare's R. III.

- With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.
2. It has sometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest:
Forsakes his food, and, pining for the last,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass. Dryd.
3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakesp. Tit. And.
Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Piety.
He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.
- Jo'vous. adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.
Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem. Fa. Queen.
Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.
Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryden.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.
2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. F. Queen.
3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryden.
- IPECACUANHA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]
Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown, or blackish colour on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils.
The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal use, because the brown, being stronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Ipe- cacuanha was in the middle of the last century first brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dysenteries, a virtue discovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it sunk into oblivion, being given in two large doses.
Hill's Mat. Med.
- IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, French.]
Partaking of the nature of anger.
The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions the crasis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Aliments.
We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.
- IRE. n. f. [Fr. ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.
She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.
If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak. H. VI.
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton's Par. Lost.
The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton's Parad. Lost.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
'Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.
- IREFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shakesp. H. VI.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakesp. Henry VI.
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.
In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.
- IREFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

- IRIS n. f. [Latin.]
1. The rainbow.
Beside the solary iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.
2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.
3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.
4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.
- To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pœnæ est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say,
tædet, it irketh.
Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads;
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakesp. H. VI.
- IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.
I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakespeare.
Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shak. As you like it.
Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.
There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison's Spectator.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.
- IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.
- IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tedioufness; wearisomeness.
- IRON. n. f. [haiarn, Welsh; jern, nen, Saxon; iorn, Erse.]
1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in most, and of a small price, though superior in real value to the dearest. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a less degree than gold, silver, lead, or copper: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, in which it is called cast iron, it is scarce malleable; and the most ductile iron, heated and suddenly quenched in cold water, loses much of this quality. Iron is more capable of rust than any other metal, is very sonorous, and requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. It consists of a vitriolick salt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The spe-cifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone.
Iron is not only soluble in all the stronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in some places but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesp. Jul. Cæs.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die,
he is a murderer. Num. xxxv. 16.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone, and a power to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.
Locke.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward on Fossils.
Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work in general.
Maxon's Mech. Exer.
2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron.
Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shak. R. III.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pf.
Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Job xli. 7:
For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.
3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul. Psalms, Common Prayer.
- IRON.

IRON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakesp. H. VI.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight

Unto my cell. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens: the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortim.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward on Fossils.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodw.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind,

Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crashaw.

O sad virgin, that thy power

Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing

Such notes as warbled to the string,

Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,

And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,

From blooming youth down to decaying age,

My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod, And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope's Odyssey.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought

T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,

Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron witted fools,

And unrespective boys: none are for me,

That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shakesp. R. III.

To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,

Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Cruso.

IRONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or beard is divided into three parts: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos; which afterward turn to so many oblong seeds, shut up in an husk, which before was the flower-cup: to these marks must be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a crest, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposite, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Fossils.

IRONY. n. s. [ironie, Fr. ἰρωνεία.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. s. [irradiance, French; irradio, Latin.]

IRRA'DIANCY. }

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency; the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly spirits? Or do they mix

Irradiance! virtual, or immediate touch? Milt. Par. Lost.

To IRRA'DIATE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs

Irradiate; there plant eyes: all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store

Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.

IRRADIA'TION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of derivation and immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IRRA'TIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Latin.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; without the discursive faculty.

Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,

Daughter of sin, among th' irrational

Death introduc'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He hath eat'n, and lives,

And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns;

Irrational till then. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRATIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.] Want of reason.

IRRA'TIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.] Without reason; absurdly.

IRRECLA'IMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calumnies will continue. Addison's Freeholder.

IRRECONCI'LABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be reconciled; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,

Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

2. Not to be made consistent. It has with or to.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency. Arbutn. Hist. of John Bull.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheist's own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unaccountable, and irreconcilable to any system of science. Bentley.

IRRECONCI'LABLENESS. n. s. [from irreconcilable.] Impossibility to be reconciled.

IRRECONCI'LABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

A servant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Shakesp. H. V.

IRRECO'VERABLE. adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment just fled by us, it is impossible to recall. Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Hocker.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire. Tillotson's Sermons.

IRRECO'VERABLY.

IRRECO'VERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.] Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid' the blaze of noon;

Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse,

Without all hope of day.

Milton's Agonistes.

The credit of the Exchequer is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers.

Temple.

IRREDU'CIBLE. adj. [in and reducible.] Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water.

Boyle.

IRREFRAGABI'LITY. n. f. [from irrefragable.] Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRA'GABLE. adj. [irrefragabilis, school Latin; irrefragable, Fr.] Not to be confuted; superior to argumental opposition.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Christianity must be: they who resisted them would resist every thing.

Atterbury.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reason for working by slow degrees.

Swift.

IRREFRA'GABLY. adv. [from irrefragable.] With force above confutation.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves.

Atterbury.

IRREFU'TABLE. adj. [irrefutabilis, Latin.] Not to be overthrown by argument.

IRRE'GULAR. adj. [irregulier, Fr. irregularis, Latin.]

The am'rous youth

Obtain'd of Venus his desire,

Howe'er irregular his fire.

Prior.

2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.

This motion seems excentrique and irregular, yet not well to be resisted or quieted.

King Charles.

Regular

Then most, when most irregular they seem.

Milton.

The numbers of pindariques are wild and irregular, and sometimes seem harsh and uncouth.

Cowley.

3. Not being according to the laws of virtue. A soft word for vitious.

IRREGULA'RITY. n. f. [irregularité, Fr. from irregular.]

1. Deviation from rule.

2. Neglect of method and order.

This irregularity of its unruly and tumultuous motion might afford a beginning unto the common opinion.

Brown.

As these vast heaps of mountains are thrown together with so much irregularity and confusion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms.

Addison on Italy.

3. Inordinate practice.

Religion is somewhat less in danger of corruption, while the sinner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is ashamed of his irregularities.

Rogers's Sermons.

IRRE'GULARLY. adv. [from irregular.] Without observation of rule or method.

Phaeton,

By the wild courses of his fancy drawn,

From East to West irregularly hurl'd,

First set on fire himself, and then the world.

Dryden jun.

Your's is a foul irregularly great,

Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat.

Dryden.

It may give some light to those whose concern for their little ones makes them so irregularly bold as to consult their own reason, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old custom.

Locke.

TO IRRE'GULATE. v. a. [from in and regula, Latin.] To make irregular; to disorder.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

IRRE'LATIVE. adj. [in and relativus, Latin.] Having no reference to any thing; single; unconnected.

Separated by the voice of God, things in their species came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelative feminalities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IRRELI'GION. n. f. [irreligion, Fr. in and religion.] Contempt of religion; impiety.

The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated.

Dryden.

We behold every instance of prophaneness and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in.

Rogers.

IRRELI'GIOUS. adj. [irreligieux, Fr. in and religious.]

1. Contemning religion; impious.

The issue of an irreligious Moor.

Shakesp. Tit. Andron.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,

With burthen of a sickness weak and faint,

But hears them talking of religion then,

And vowing of their souls to ev'ry saint.

Davies.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious.

South's Sermons.

2. Contrary to religion.

Wherein that Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead, or serveth nothing at all to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think.

Hooker.

Might not the queen's domesticks be obliged to avoid swearing, and irreligious profane discourse?

Swift.

IRRELI'GIOUSLY. adv. [from irreligious.] With impiety; with irreligion.

IRRE'MEABLE. adj. [irremeabilis, Latin.] Admitting no return.

The keeper charm'd, the chief without delay

Pass'd on, and took th' irremeable way.

Dryden.

IRREME'DIABLE. adj. [irremediable, Fr. in and remediable.] Admitting no cure; not to be remedied.

They content themselves with that which was the irremediable error of former times, or the necessity of the present hath cast upon them.

Hooker.

A steady hand, in governing of military affairs, is more requisite than in times of peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediable.

Bacon.

Whatever he consults you about, unless it lead to some fatal and irremediable mischief, be sure you advise only as a friend.

Locke.

IRREME'DIABLY. adv. [from irremediable.] Without cure.

It happens to us irremediably and inevitably, that we may perceive these accidents are not the fruits of our labour, but gifts of God.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

IRREMI'SSIBLE. adj. [in and remitto, Lat. irremissible, French.] Not to be pardoned.

IRREMI'SSIBLENESS. n. f. [from irremissible.] The quality of being not to be pardoned.

IRRESOLUTE. adj. [irresolu, Fr. in and resolute.] Not constant in purpose; not determined.

Were he evil us'd, he would outgo

His father, by as much as a performance

Does an irresolute purpose. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Him, after long debate, irresolute

Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom

To enter. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenious but irresolute men. Temple.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,

Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;

Irresolute on which she should rely,

At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

IRRESOLUTELY. adv. [from irresolute.] Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

IRRESOLUTION. n. f. [irresolution, Fr. in and resolution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the lightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolution. Bacon's Natural History.

Irresolution on the schemes of life, which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

IRRESPECTIVE. adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all foul sins. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRRETRIEVABLY. adv. [from irretrievable.] Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrievably lost, and useless to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

IRREVERENCE. n. f. [irreverentia, Lat. irreverence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.

Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Decay of Piety.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury, can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRREVERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand. Hooker.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of inestimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Raleigh.

Witness the irreverent son

Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame

Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,

Servant of servants, on his vitious race. Milt. Par. Lost.

Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Ray.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

IRREVERSIBLE. adj. [in and reverse.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers's Sermons.

IRREVERSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of solidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREVOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,

And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,

That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shakesp.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,

Which I have past upon her. Shakesp. As you like it.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle that labour in past matters. Bacon's Essays.

The second, both for piety renown'd,

And puissant deeds, a promise shall receive

Irrevocable, that his regal throne

For ever shall endure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By her irrevocable fate,

War shall the country waste and change the state. Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment stood,

Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;

For ever lost, th' irrevocable light

Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,

And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRREVOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

TO IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moisten; to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray on the Creation.

A bulky charger near their lips,

With which, in often interrupted sleep,

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Phillips.

The flow'ry lap

Of some irriguous valley spreads her store. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist: Phillips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus for apor.

Rash Elpenor

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought

T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep:

Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

IRRISION. n. f. [irrisio, Lat. irrisio, French.] The act of laughing at another.

This person, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrisio, and exposing of his father, incurs his indignation and curse. Woodward's Natural History.

TO IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon's Henry VII.

His power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them according to his own humour and indiscretion, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his cholerick disposition. Clarendon.

2. To

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Rous'd

By dash of clouds, or irritating war

Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,

They furious spring.

Thomson's Summer.

IRRITATION. n. f. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritate.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.

2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbuthnot.

IRRUPTION. n. f. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

I refrain, too suddenly,

To utter what will come at last too soon;

Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,

Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep.

Milton.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea.

Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation.

Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled.

Addison on Italy.

IS. [is, Saxon. See TO BE.]

1. The third person singular of to be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. Jo. viii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good.

Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in fumes; and nothing is,

But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakesp.

ISABELLA Colour. n. f. A kind of colour.

Ainsw.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ισχιαδικοι, ισχιαδικοις; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet given to the veins of the foot that terminate in the crural.

Harris.

ISCHURY. n. f. [ισχυρια, ισχω and ουρον, urine; ischurie, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. f. [ischuretique, Fr. from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [isc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as fool, foolish; man, mannish; rogue, roguish.

ISICLE. n. f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; isc, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

—The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle

That's curdled by the frost from purest snow

Hanging on Dian's temple.

Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;

Those are not limbs for isicles to tear.

Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n. f. [from ice, or ise, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent; much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin shreds like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a species of sturgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines.

Hill's Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass.

Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or redish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanterns.

Hill's Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Latin; isla, Italian; ealand, Eise. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,

An island shades it from the rolling sea,

And forms a port.

Dryden.

Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,

Some happier island in the wat'ry waste.

Johnson.

Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas.

Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounce ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders

By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakesp. Othello.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders—in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island.

Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,

Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;

The native islanders alone their care,

And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope's Odyssey.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

Is it not an easy matter

To make lord William Hastings of our mind,

For the instalment of this noble duke

In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Shakesp. R. III.

The dreadful fight

Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:

Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,

And how these monsters did disarm an isle.

Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,

Long sounding isses and intermingled graves,

Black melancholy sits.

Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n. f. [ισο, μετρος, and μετρον.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest.

Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. f. [iso, cele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal.

Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Pf. lxxviii. 20.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.

Prov. iv. 23.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty.

Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been; if that issue of wealth had been stopped?

Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,

But to fine issues.

Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.

If I were ever fearful

To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,

Whereof the execution did cry out

Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear

Which oft infects the wisest.

Shak. Winter's Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove

To good beginnings of each enterprize.

Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever.

South's Sermons.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy.

South's Sermons.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bent.

4. Termination;

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!

How wild a passion works within my breast!

With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!

When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Since that the truest issue of thy throne,

By his own interdiction stands accurs'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,

Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd

True paradise, under the Æthiop line

By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,

Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden's Æn.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowel.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issu, Fr. uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house.

Ezek. xlvii. 1.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History of the World.

Waters issu'd from a cave.

Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.

See that none hence issue forth a spy.

Milton.

Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;

With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,

A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;

Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,

And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarages issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again.

Bacon's Natural History.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,

A mansion proper for a mourning god:

Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees

To rivers, his dependent deities.

Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,

In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;

The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

I have done sin;

For which the heav'ns, taking angry note,

Have left me issueless.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. s. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Sandys's Travels.

The north side of the Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas.

Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!

Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwixt two eternities,

Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;

But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more adviseable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,

A being darkly wise, and rudely great.

Pope.

IT. pronoun. [It, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?

I know it cannot.

Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,

Thou who master art of it.

Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;

But kindly waits his father's coming home.

Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know

The rage of love.

Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, fir, can you hear?

Imagine that which you would most deplore,

And that which I would speak; is it or more.

Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions!

Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison's Freeholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?

—Even so

As with a man by his own alms impositon'd,

And with his charity slain.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,

That tractable obedience is a slave

To each incensed will.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;

For catching foe by nearer foot,

He lifted with such might and strength,

As would have hurl'd him thrice his length.

Hudibras.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

A mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison's Spectator.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,

If folly grows romantick, I must paint it.

Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,

Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:

It is a peerless kinsman.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:

Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him.

Shakesp. King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ily a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?

—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word

Macduff is fled to England.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

City,

'Tis I, that made thy widows.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul.

Pope.

ITCH. n. f. ꝙꝓꝓꝓ, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty

Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,

That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,

And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak. Timon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deutr. xxviii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd

The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd.

Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,

All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:

When universal homage Umbra pays,

All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise.

Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing. A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wise man's Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;

Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear.

Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.

Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,

To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shak. Julius Cæsar.

The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,

And fain would be upon the laughing side.

Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. f.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakespeare.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanv.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftner than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hook.

If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. To do over again.

Ashes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Adam took no thought,

Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate

Her former trespasses fear'd, the more to sooth

Him with her lov'd society.

Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Latin.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Nat. History.

ITERATION. n. f. [iteration, French; iteratio, Latin.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration

As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.

Shakespeare.

My husband!

—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

—My husband!

—What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerant, French.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison's Spectator.

ITINERARY. n. f. [itinaire, French; itinerarium, Latin.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITINERARY. adj. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Henry VII.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there?

Shakesp. Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets lift'ning stood,

While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milt. Par. Lost.

JUBILATION. n. f. [jubilation, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. f. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Latin.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung

With jubilee, and loud hosanna's fill'd

Th' eternal regions.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing: the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing, the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts.

Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. f. [jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS Tree. n. f. [siliquastrum, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, whose wings are placed above the standard: the head is composed of two petals; the pointal, which rises in the centre of the flower-cup, and is encompassed with the stamina, afterward becomes a long flat pod, containing several kidney-shaped seeds: to which may be added roundish leaves, growing alternately on the branches.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To JUDAIZE. v. n. [judaiser, Fr. judaizo, low Latin.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all.

Sandys.

JUDGE. n. f. [juge, French; judex, Latin.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?

Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation. Pf. lxxviii. 5.

Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Milton.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. Shakesp. H. VIII.
3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.
How dares your pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.
A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.
To JUDGE. v. n. [juger, French; judico, Latin.]
1. To pass sentence.
My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.
Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chro. xix. 6.
2. To form or give an opinion.
Beshever me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shakespeare.
Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man. Jo. viii. 15.
Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milton.
If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryd.
Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.
He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.
3. To discern; to distinguish.
How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job xxii. 13.
Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor. xi. 13.
How properly the Tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.
To JUDGE. v. a.
1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.
Chaos shall judge the strife. Milton.
Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely.
He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Pf. cx. 6.
Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.
Let no man judge you in meat or drink. 2 Col. 16.
- JU'DGER. n. f. [from judge.] One who forms judgment; or passes sentence.
The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.
They who guide themselves meerly by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.
- JU'DGMENT. n. f. [jugement, French]
1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shak. Julius Caesar.
The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.
Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high. Watts.
2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shakesp. H. VI.
3. The act of exercising judicature.
They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings xxv. 6.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear. Addison's Spectator.
4. Determination; decision.
Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanv. Scep.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.
5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.
Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.
'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.
I see mens judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shakespeare.
7. Sentence against a criminal.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With agony. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Acts xxv. 15.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd. Milton.
8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.
The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom v. 16.
The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.
9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.
This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakesp. King Lear.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.
10. Distribution of justice.
The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts xviii. 12.
Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakesp. Coriol.
In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.
A bold and wise petitioner goes strait to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbuthn. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
11. Judiciary laws; statutes.
If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them,
The Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deutr.
12. The last doom.
The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
- JU'DICATORY. n. f. [judico, Latin.]
1. Distribution of justice.
No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.
2. Court of justice.
Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Atterb.
- JU'DICATURE. n. f. [judicature, Fr. judico, Latin.] Power of distributing justice.
The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.
In judicatures to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South's Sermons.
- JUDICIAL. adj. [judicium, Latin.]
1. Practised in the distribution of publick justice.
What government can be without judicial proceedings?
And what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley's Sermon.
2. Inflicted on as a penalty.
The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness. South.
- JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.
It will behove us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare. Grew's Cosmol.
- JUDI'CIARY. adj. [judiciaire, Fr. judiciarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.
Before weight be laid upon notions of judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought, by severe experiments, to be made out. Boyle.
- JUDICIOUS. adj. [judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skilful in any matter or affair.
For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Love hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious. Milton.
To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious. Milton.
We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.
- JUDI'CIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious.] Skilfully; wisely; with just determination.
So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden.
Longinus

J U K

Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryden.
JUG. n. f. [jugge, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
 Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts. Shak.
 He fetch'd 'em drink,

Fill'd a large jug up to the brink. Swift's Miscel.
TO JU'GGLE. v. n. [jouglor or jongler, Fr. jocari, Lat.]

1. To play tricks by flight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby on Bodies.

2. To practise artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
 That palter with us in a double sense. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 Is't possible the spells of France should juggle
 Men into such strange mockeries? Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
 Disdain'd to stay for friends consents;
 Nor juggl'd about settlements. Hudibras, p. iii.

JU'GGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.

2. An imposture; a deception.

The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.

JU'GGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
 As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
 Drug-working forcerers that change the mind,
 Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
 And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.
 I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Croesus, and a notable juggler. Sandys's Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and imposters, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
 But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 18.

What magick makes our money rise,
 When dropt into the southern main;
 Or do these jugglers cheat us? Swift's Miscel.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
 You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
 And stoll'n my love's heart from him? Shakespeare.
 I sing no harm

To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

JU'GGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JU'GULAR. adj. [jugulum, Latin.] Belonging to the throat.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wiseman's Surgery.

JUICE. n. f. [jus, French; juys, Dutch.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts's Logick, p. i.

Unnumber'd fruits,

A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished; unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

Divine Providence has spread her table every-where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. More's Antidote against Atheism.

When Boreas' spirit blusters fore,
 Beware th' inclement heav'ns; now let thy hearth
 Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JU'ICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Each plant and juiciest gourd will pluck. Milton.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
 Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs

With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

TO JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing: as, birds.

J U M

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JUJUB. n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oblong fleshy fruit, shaped like an olive, including an hard shell divided into cells, each containing an oblong nut or kernel. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Mill.

JU'LAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.]

Julap is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here;
 That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
 With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt. Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorificks and cordials expel the venom, and temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wiseman's Surgery.

JULUS. n. f.

1. July flower. See CLOVE-GILLIFLOWER and GILLIFLOWER.

2. Julus, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JU'LY. n. f. [Julius, Lat. juillet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Caesar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peacham.

JU'MART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

TO JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer; jombre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
 And lucky mains make people wise;
 And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
 Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually ordered for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter. Bentley's Sermons.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
 How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope's Dunciad.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

TO JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

JU'MENT. n. f. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

TO JUMP. v. n. [gumpen, Dutch.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move forward without step or sliding. Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Here, upon this bank and shelve of time,
 We'd jump the life to come. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The herd come jumping by me,
 And fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,
 And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink
 A flock of geese jump down together,
 Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
 And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office. Gulliver's Travels.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.

We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 626.

3. To jolt.

The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nab. iii. 2.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.

Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakespeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shakefp. Othello.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barb'rous nations. Shakespeare.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras, p. i.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:

For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;

So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras, p. iii.

Good wits jump, and mine the nimbler of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryd.

I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.

But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakespeare's Othello.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.

2. A lucky chance.

Do not exceed

The prescript of this scrawl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

3. [Jupe, French.] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber stays worn by sickly ladies.

The weeping cassock scar'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump. Cleaveland.

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.

2. Any delicacy.

A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser, Sonnet 77.

With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton.

3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use. See JUNKET.JUNCIOUS. adj. [juncous, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.JUNCTION. n. f. [jonction, French.] Union; coalition.

Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JUNCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Latin.]

1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the distillatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. More.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.

3. Union; amity.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. K. Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.

By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life. Addison.

When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 16.

JUNE. n. f. [juin, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.

JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 100.

JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the first is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.

Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of juli with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of these juli, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diureticks, and carminative. Hill.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wisem.

JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]

1. A small ship of China.

America, which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships. Bacon's New Atlantis.

To JUNKET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South's Sermons.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. *South.*JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality. South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver's Travels.

IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the dens exertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Achem do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than of the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd iv'ry this, that of transparent horn:

True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd iv'ry pass deluding lies. Dryden's Æn.

JURIDICAL. adj. [juridicus, Lat. juridique, Fr.]

1. Acting in the distribution of justice.

2. Used in courts of justice.

According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the first. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law of England.

JURIDICALLY. adj. [from juridical.] With legal authority; according to forms of justice.

JURISCONSULT. n. f. [juris consultus, Latin.] One who gives his opinion in cases of law.

There is mention made, in a decision of the jurisconsult Javolemus, of a Britannick fleet. Arbuthnot on Coins.

JURISDICTION. n. f. [jurisdictio, Lat., jurisdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker, b. v.

Without the king's assent or knowledge,

You wrought to be a legate; by which power

You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shakespeare.

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office. Hayward.

This place exempt

From heav'n's high jurisdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.

This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

JURISPRUDENCE. n. f. [jurisprudence, Fr. jurisprudentia, Lat.]

The science of law.

JURIST. n. f. [juriste, Fr. jura, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who professes the science of the law; a civilian.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bac.

JUROR. n. f. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, this would be as bad; for the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser's State of Ireland.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful, I see your end,

'Tis my undoing. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,

Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,

Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empanelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or dis-

J U S

allow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called  nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,

May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakespeare. Meas. for Measure.

How innocent I was,

His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakespeare. H. IV.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bac.

JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impanelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,

And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift's Miscel.

JURYMAST. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage

Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephaph. Lev. xix.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson's Sermons.

Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,

Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

3. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, his satyr pointed, and his sense close. Dryden's Juu.

These scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,

She drew from them what they deriv'd from heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,

Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,

A certain bard encount'ring on the way,

Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,

As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts's Logick.

4. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

Noah was a just man, and perfect. Gen. vi. 9.

How should man be just with God? Job ix. 2.

A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xxiv. 16.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Mat. xiv. 14.

The just th' unjust to serve.

5. True; not forged; not falsely imputed; well grounded. Milton.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

Me though just right

Did first create your leader. Milton.

6. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward, Heb. ii. 2.

Whose damnation is just. Rom. iii. 8.

As Hesiod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,

And a most just and glad increase it yields, Denham.

7. Complete without superfluity or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon's Henry VII.

8. Regular; orderly.

When all

The war shall stand ranged in its just array,

And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee, Addison.

9. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship

To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shak.

10. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had divers skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

There is not any one particular abovementioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars.

Dutchess of Newcastle.

11. Exact in retribution.

See nations slowly wise, and meanly just,

To bury'd merit raise the tardy bust.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

Just. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as she spoke,

Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

A few seem to understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

Bentley's Sermons.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none

Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The nereids swam before

To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale

But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,

That so I neither may be rich nor poor;

And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

Just. n. f. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?

Shakespeare's Richard II.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,

In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;

Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,

And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To Just. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to juggle.

Justice. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,

As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,

I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Loc.

2. Vindicative retribution; punishment.

This shews you are above

Yon justices, that these our nether crimes

So speedily can venge. Shakesp. King Lear.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.

Left justice overtake us. Is. lix. 9.

Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,

That if my speech offend a noble heart,

Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel.

And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdr. viii. 23.

5. Justice of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,

He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.

6. Justice of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

7. Justice of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

8. Justices of Assise. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assises; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowel.

9. Justices in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

10. Justices of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners, that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assise were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.

11. Justices of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assise; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justicarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assise, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

12. Justices of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws and modern instances,

And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

I sing no harm

To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

To Justice. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proscription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justiced himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poison the young queen of Scots, the king delivered him to the French king, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JUSTICEMENT. n. f. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JUSTICER. n. f. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JUSTICESHIP. n. f. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason; conformable to justice.

Just are the ways of God,

And justifiable to men.

Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. f. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough.

King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures.

Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support; absolution from guilt.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature.

Swift.

2. Deliverance by pardon from sins past.

Clarke.

In such righteousness

To them by faith imputed, they may find

Justification towards God, and peace

Of conscience.

Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xii.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth.

Hammond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. f. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

Ro. iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;

I cannot justify, whom law condemns.

Shakesp. H. VI.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children.

Mat. xi.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

Job xxv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment.

Ecclef. x. 25.

You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd.

Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood.

Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,

Her doing seem'd to justify the deed.

Milt. Par. Lost.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,

And that must justify our sad divorce.

Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,

And justify their author's want of sense.

Dryden.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession.

Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Acts xiii.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by

All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips

Of all rejoindure.

Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways.

Nab. ii. 4.

Argo pass'd

Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks.

Milton.

Late the clouds

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,

Tine the slant lightning.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not one starry spark,

But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark.

Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;

And, when they break their friendship, plead their want.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Murmuring noises rise in every street;

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,

And, in the dark, men justle as they meet.

Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear

His trunk, and castles justled in the air,

My sword thy way to victory had shown.

Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said hitherto shall thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature.

Woodw.

I thought the dean had been too proud

To justle here among a crowd.

Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men.

King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The surly commons shall respect deny,

And justle peerage out with property.

Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries.

Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post.

Collier of the Eagerness of Desire.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel.

Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while.

Addison's Guardian.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame.

South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open fight:

Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword

Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd.

Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,

Taught them in laws and letters to excel,

In acting justly, and in writing well.

Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,

Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground.

Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. f. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.

Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act

Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shakespeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action.

Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions.

Addison's Guardian.

To JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut

Upon the innocent and awless throne:

Shakesp. R. III.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders.

Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,

Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea.

Dryden.

A port secure for ships to ride,

Broke by the jutting land on either side;

In double streams the briny waters glide.

Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;

Let it pry through the portage of the head

Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it

As fearfully, as doth a galled rock

O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,

Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.

Shakesp. H. V.

JU'VILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust.

Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.] Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 21.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.

Glanv. Sceps. Preface.

JUXTAPOSITION.

I V Y

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a meer juxtaposition. Glanv. Sceps.

Ivy. n. f. [iwig, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment: the leaves are angular; the flowers, for the most part, consist of six leaves, and are succeeded by round black berries, which grow in round bunches, each of which, for the most part, contains four seeds. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love.

Raleigh,

The clasping ivy where to climb.

Milt. Parad. Lost.

JY'MOLD. adj. [See GIMAL.]

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;

And in their pale dull mouths the jymo'd bit

Lies, foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

K E C

K.

A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill; but is not much in use, except after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, beek. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand as accur'd in the calendar. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

KA'LI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea-weed, of the ashes of which glass was made, whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali is sold to the Venetians for their glass works.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Bacon.

Kam, in Erse, is squint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian, hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

The blood he hath lost, he dropt it for his country:

And what is left, to lose it by his country,

Were to us all that do't and suffer it,

A brand to th' end o' th' world.

—This is clean kam.

—Meerly awry.

Shakespeare.

To KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook. See CAW.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their empty mouths but noise and air, leave them as hungry as before.

Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven-kind doth bring,

Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird.

Dryden.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,

And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance. Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

To KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N°. 68.

The faction, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious.

Swift's Miscel.

To KE'CKLE a cable. To defend a cable round with rope.

Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY. n. f. [commonly kex, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or kex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow jointed plant.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,

Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakesp. Henry V.

KE'CKY. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversly, it looks as a bundle of wires.

Grew.

To KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the fore-sail, or fore-top-sail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger.

Harris.

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KEE, the provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

A lass that Cic'ly hight had won his heart,

Cic'ly the western lass that tends the kee.

Gay's Past.

KE'DLACK. n. f. A weed that grows among corn; charnock.

Tusser.

KEEL. n. f. [cœle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, Fr.] The bottom of the ship.

Portunus

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,

And steer'd the sacred vessel.

Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder.

Grew's Cosmol. b. i.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel

The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel.

Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles, which see.

To KEEL. v. a. [cælan, Saxon.] This word, which is preserved in Shakespeare, probably signifies to cool, though Hammer explains it otherwise.

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hammer.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Shakespeare.

KE'ELFAT. n. f. [cælan, Saxon, to cool, and fat or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. f. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

To KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seamen's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cene, Saxon; kuhn, German; koen, Dutch.]

hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king, strengthened by the great or broad seal, without which seal all such instruments by law are of no force ; for the king is, in interpretation and intendment of law, a corporation, and therefore passeth nothing firmly, but under the great seal.
This lord keeper, by the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the like jurisdiction, and all other advantages, as hath the lord chancellor of England. Cowell.

KE'EPERSHIP. n. f. [from keeper.] Office of a keeper.
The common gaol of the shire is kept at Launceston :
this keepership is annexed to the constableness of the castle.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

KEG. n. f. [caque, French.] A small barrel, commonly used for a fish barrel.

KELL. n. f. A sort of pottage. Ains. It is so called in Scotland, being a soupe made with shred greens.

KELL. n. f. The omentum ; that which inwraps the guts.
The very weight of bowels and kell, in fat people, is the occasion of a rupture. Wiseman's Surgery.

KELP. n. f. A salt produced from calcined sea-weed.
In making alum, the workmen use the ashes of a sea-weed called kelp, and urine. Boyle on Colours.

KE'ELSON. n. f. [more properly keelson.] The wood next the keel.
We have added close pillars in the royal ships, which being fastened from the keelson to the beams of the second deck, keep them from settling, or giving way. Raleigh.

KE'ILTER. n. f. [He is not in kelter, that is, he is not ready ;
from kilter, to gird, Danish. Skinner.]

To KEMB. v. a. [cœmban, Saxon ; kammen, German : now written, perhaps less properly, to comb.] To separate or disentangle by a denticulated instrument.
Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd and bath'd, and rubb'd and trim'd,
More sleek. Benj. Johnson.
Thy head and hair are sleek ;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

To KEN. v. a. [cennan, Saxon ; kenman, Dutch, to know.]

1. To see at a distance ; to descry.
At once as far as angels ken, he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton's Par. Lost.
The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, before us thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
If thou ken'st from far,
Among the Pleiads, a new-kindled star ;
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.
We ken them from afar, the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms. Addison.

2. To know.
'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate. Shakesp.
Now plain I ken whence love his rise begun :
Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son,
Bred up in shambles. Gay's Past.

KEN. n. f. [from the verb.] View ; reach of sight.
Lo ! within a ken, our army lies. Shakesp. Henry IV.
When from the mountain top Pisanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a ken. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
It was a hill

Of paradise the highest ; from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect, lay. Milton.
He soon
Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.
Rude, as their ships, was navigation then ;
No useful compass or meridian known :
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryd.
When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.

KE'NNEL. n. f. [chenil, French.]

1. A cot for dogs.
A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kennel. Sidney.
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakesp.
The seditious remain within their station, which, by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakespeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

4. [Kennel, Dutch ; chenal, Fr. canalis, Latin.] The watercourse of a street.
Bad humours gather to a a bile ; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayw.
He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.

To KE'NNEL. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie ; to dwell : used of beasts, and of man in contempt.
Yet, when they list, would creep,
If ought disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there ; yet there still bark'd and howl'd Within, unseen. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
The dog kennelled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted upon the boughs. L'Estrange's Fables.

KEPT. pret. and part. pass. of keep.

KERCHE'IF. n. f. [cowrecheif, Chaucer ; couvre, to cover, and chef, the head ; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands.]

1. A head drefs.
I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond ; thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vaillant.
—A plain kerchief, Sir John ; my brows become nothing else. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The proudest kerchief of the court shall rest
Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden.

2. Any cloath used in drefs.
O ! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck.
Hayward.

KERCHE'IFED. } adj. [from kerchief.] Dressed ; hooded.
KERCHE'IFT. }

The evening comes
Kerchief in a comely cloud,
While racking winds are piping loud. Milton.

KERF. n. f. [ceorfan, Saxon, to cut.]
The sawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff is called a kerf. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.

KE'RMES. n. f.
Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour, covered when most perfect with a purplish grey dust. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed yield a scarlet juice. It is found adhering to a kind of holm oak, and till lately was generally understood to be a vegetable excrescence ; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.

KERN. n. f. [an Irish word.] Irish foot soldier ; an Irish boor.
Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kearn supplied. Spenser.
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping kernes to trust their heels,
But the Norweyan lord, surveying advantage,
Began a fresh assault. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If in good plight these Northern kerns arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips's Briton.

KERN. n. f. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone, by which corn is ground. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.

To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]

1. To harden as ripened corn.
When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falleth out that an ill kerned or saved harvest soon emptieth their old store. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. To

KEY

2. To take the form of grains; to granulate.
The principal knack is in making the juice, when sufficiently boiled, to kern or granulate. Grew.
KE'RNEL. n. f. [cýnnel, a gland, Saxon; karne, Dutch; cerneau, French.]
The edible substance contained in a shell.
As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakespeare.
There can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.
2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.
The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,
Can cloath a mountain, and o'ershade a plain. Denham.
Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.
I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakesp. Tempest.
The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concentered.
A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arb.
5. Knobby concretions in childrens flesh.
To KE'RNEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen to kernels.
In Staffordshire, garden-rouncivals sown in the fields kernel well, and yield a good increase. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest. Fairfax.
- KE'STREL. n. f. A little kind of bastard hawk. Hammer.
In his kestrel kind,
A pleasing vein of glory, vain did find,
To which his flowing tongue, and troublous sprit,
Gave him great aid. Fairy Queen.
Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.
- KETCH. n. f. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship.
I wonder
That such a ketch can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shak. Henry VIII.
- KE'TTLE. n. f. [cetl, Saxon; ketel, Dutch.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.
The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seetheing shone. Dryden.
- KE'TTLEDUM. n. f. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass.
As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakesp. Hamlet.
- KEY. n. f. [cæg, Saxon.]
1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.
If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shak. King Lear.
Poor key cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shakesp. Rich. III.
The glorious standard last to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.
Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opes the palace of eternity. Milton.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South's Sermons.
He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.
I keep her in one room, I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket. Prior.

KIC

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.
Hide the key of the jack. Swift.
3. An explanation of any thing difficult.
An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.
These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.
4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.
Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Pam.
5. [In musick.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakesp.
But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.
Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakespeare.
6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.
A key of fire ran along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.
- KE'YAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key. Ainsworth.
- KEYHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.
Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakespeare.
I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tailor.
I keep her in one room; I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket;
The keyhole is that left? Most certain. Prior.
- KEYSTONE. n. f. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.
If you will add a keystone and chaptrels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- KIBE. n. f. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner; from kibave, Welsh, Minshew.] An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.
If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakesp.
The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
One boast of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wiseman.
- KI'BED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as kibed heels.
- To KICK. v. a. [kauchen, German; calco, Latin.] To strike with the foot.
He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.
It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.
Another, whose son had employments at court, that valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.
- To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.
Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Sa. ii. 29.
Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked. Deutr. xxxii. 15.
The doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.
- KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.
What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryd. Juvenal.
- KI'CKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.
- KI'CKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, and seems to think it used in contempt of dancing.]
1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.
Shall we need the monseurs of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshoes? Milton.
2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.
Some pigeons, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakesp. H. IV.
In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;
Cressly was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.
- KI'CKSY-WICKSEY. n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

K I L

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kickfy-wicksey here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shakespeare.

KID. n. f. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Fa. Queen.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Dandled the kid. Milton.

So kids and whelps their fires and dams express;

And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden's Virgil.

2. [From cidwlen, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID. v. a. [from the noun] To bring forth kids.

KIDDER. n. f. An ingrosser of corn to enhance its price. Ainsf.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spectator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Race; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [so named from its shape.]

It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which becomes a long pod, inclosing several seeds, which are shaped almost like a kidney. it has pinnated leaves, consisting of an unequal number of lobes. Miller.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

KIDNEYVETCH. } n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.

But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

To KILL. v. a. [Anciently To quell; cpellan, Saxon; kelen, Dutch]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death as an agent.

Dar'ft thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

—Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shakesf. R. III.

Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Ex. xvi. 3.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Mac. v. 13.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,

To fright the animals, and to kill them up

In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shakespeare.

Thou shalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock. Deutr. xii.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Sa. xxv. 11.

3. To deprive of life as a cause or instrument.

The medicines which go to the magical ointments, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or barm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon's Natural History.

Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer on the Humours.

KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son! Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill

His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,

When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time,

When love was held so capital a crime,

K I N

That a crown'd head could no compassion find,

But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KILLOW. n. f. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as foot is thereby produced.]

An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the North, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN. n. f. [cýln, Saxon] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.—

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not flacked. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

KILT for killed. Spenser.

KIMBO. adj. [a schembo, Italian.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,

And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

KIN. n. f. [cýnne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Th' unhappy Palamon,

Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,

Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars

Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakespeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,

Were overborn by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,

Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,

Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,

A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst,

And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,

Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpriz'd my sense,

That I was nothing. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin.

KIND. adj. [from cýnne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard. Shak. King Lear.

Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South's Sermons.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil.

Lu. vi. 35.

KIND. n. f. [cýnne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind

Of birds, in orderly array on wing,

Came summon'd over Eden, to receive

Their names of Thee. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. vi.

That both are animalia,

I grant; but not rationalia;

For though they do agree in kind,

Specifick difference we find. Hudibras, p. i.

God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but of kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind

Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

I instance some acts of virtue common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than ever they were among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Asterb.

He,

K I N

- He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.
2. Particular nature.
No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found, upon enquiry, to have so many. Baker.
3. Natural state.
He did, by edict, give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon's Henry VII.
The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ, or tithes. Arbutnot on Coins.
4. Nature; natural determination.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind t' admire your fellow-creature. Dryden.
5. Manner; way.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakesf. Henry IV.
This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon's Essays.
6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.
Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.
- To KÍNDLE. v. a.
1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.
He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it and baketh bread. Is. xlv. 15.
I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some mens dispositions formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.
If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South's Sermons.
2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.
I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakesf. Henry VIII.
He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job xix. 11.
Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel's Civ. War.
Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.
- To KÍNDLE. v. n. [cinnu, Welsh; cýnbelan, Saxon.]
1. To catch fire.
When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xliii. 2.
2. [From cennan, to bring forth, Saxon.]
Are you native of this place?
—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shak.
- KÍNDLER. n. f. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.
Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.
- KÍNDLY. adv. [from kind.]
1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.
Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakespeare.
I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakesf. Coriol.
Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Ro. xii. 10.
His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.
Who, with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
With good words, and count'nance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely? Swift.
- KÍNDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]
1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.
This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.
These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. iv.
2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.
3. Bland; mild; softening.
Through all the living regions do'st thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

K I N

- Ye heav'ns, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r! Pope.
- KÍNDNESS. n. f. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence; good will; favour; love.
If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Ecclus. xxxvi. 23.
Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier of Friendship.
Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.
Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers's Sermons.
- KÍNDRED. n. f. [from kin; cýnnene, Saxon]
1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; affinity.
Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.
2. Relation; sort.
His horse hipp'd with an old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakesf. Taming of the Shrew.
3. Relatives.
I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakesf. Richard III.
Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.
- KÍNDRED. adj. Congeneal; related; cognate.
From Tuscan Coritum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.
- KINE. n. f. plur. from cow.
To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne. Ben. Johnson.
A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.
- KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cynig, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verstegan.]
1. Monarch; supreme governor.
The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakesf. R. III.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakesf.
The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,
'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.
2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine: as prince also is.
Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.
3. A card with the picture of a king.
The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.
4. KING at Arms, or of heralds, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarencieux. Phillips.
A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by Sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.
- To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To supply with a king.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.
2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.
Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare's Richard II.
- KÍNGAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple.
The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.
- KÍNGCRAFT. n. f. [king and craft.] The act of governing.
A word commonly used by king James.
- KÍNGCUP.

K I N

KINGCUP. n. f. [king and cup.] A flower June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peach.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KINGDOM. n. f. [from king.]
1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shakefp.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Num. xxxii.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.

KINGFISHER. n. f. A species of bird.

When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bestows, kingfishers play on shore. May's Virgil.
Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

KINGLIKE. } adj. [from king.]
KINGLY. }

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakefp.
Yet this place

Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come
To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common 'larum-bell? Shakefp. H. IV.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakespeare.

3. Noble; august.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a king-ly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakefp.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superiour dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milt. Parad. Lost.

His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wiseman's Surgery.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. K. Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. f. A plant.

The stalk is round, smooth, strong, and branchy; the leaves like those of a leek, but stronger and narrower: the flowers are divided commonly as far as the basis, naked, stel-lated, and embracing the ovary like a calyx: the apex of the ovary puts forth six stamina, and a long tube from the centre, which becomes a roundish fruit, carnos, triangular, divided into three partitions inclosing triangular seeds. Miller.

KINGSTONE. n. f. A fish.

KINFSOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinfolks. Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

K I T

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right,
Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight.
Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinwoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinwoman. Dennis's Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; κυριακη.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser.

Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Cleaveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KIRTLE. n. f. [cynce, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.

What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poesies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

TO KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; xw.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.

He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak. R. III.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shak. H. VIII.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakefp. Othello.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Sax.
cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kyben, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bac.

We see no new built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.

orangery. Spectator.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A cookmaid.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan. As

K N A

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wafting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.
Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel preaching ministry. Hudibras.
KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakespeare.
Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.
KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.
KITE. n. f. [cýra, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
Ravenous crows and kites
Fly o'er our heads. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakesp. R. III.
The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.
2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shakesp. King Lear.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.
KITESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
KITTEN. n. f. [kattenen, Dutch.] A young cat.
That a mare will sooner drown than an horse is not experienced, nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulg. Err.
It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wise man.
Helen was just slipt into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.
TO KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.
So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakesp.
The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittered in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.
TO KLINK. v. n. [from clack.]
1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.
TO KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite.
Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knab and knap may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares L'Estr.
An afs was wishing, in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estr.
KNACK. n. f. [cnec, Welsh, fly knavery; cnapinge, skill, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.
When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakesp.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.
But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose! Denham.
He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.
2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.
There is a certain knack in the art of conversation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and address of handling them. L'Estrange.
Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.
My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.
3. A nice trick.
For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.
TO KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.
KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work.
One part for plow-wright, cartwright, knacker, and smith.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. A ropemaker. [Restio, Latin] Ainsworth.
KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retain'd in Scotland.]
A hard knot in wood.
KNA'GGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.
KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece;
cnæp, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.
You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs. Bacon.
TO KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]
1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder. Common Prayer.
He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.
2. [Knaap, Erse] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural Hist.
TO KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.
I reduced shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them
knap in before they knew they were out. Wise man's Surgery.
TO KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Ainsworth.
KNA'PSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.
The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till
I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knap-
jacks. King Charles.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter to be found: I with my kna'fsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
KNA'PWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.]
This is one of the headed plants destitute of spines: the cup is squamose; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither serrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but those placed in the center are succeeded each by one seed, having a down adhering to it. There are fifty species of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the rest are exoticks. Miller.
KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.
A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]
1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.
For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.
3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.
Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South's Sermons.
When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty
knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.
An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.
4. A card with a soldier painted on it.
For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.
KNA'VERY. n. f. [from knave.]
1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakespeare.
If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Here's

K N E

Here's the folly of the ass in trusting the fox, and here's the knavery of the fox in betraying the ass. L'Estrange.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Æsop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakefp.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakefp.

KNA'VISHLY. adv. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

TO KNEAD. v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; knedan, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakespeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;
Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,

Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Ex. viii. 3.

KNEE. n. f. [cneop, Saxon; knee, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most fainting king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I have reserved to myself seven thousand, who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Ro. xi. 4.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.

Weary'd with length of ways, worn out with toil,
To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

Disdainful of Campania's gentle plains,
When for them she must bend the servile knee. Thomson.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

TO KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and kneel the way into his mercy. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Return with her!
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dow'rlers took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakef.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as kneel grass.

KNE'EDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EHOLM. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. f. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its foreside. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years; it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

K N I

The kneepan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Peacham on Drawing.

TO KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou do'st ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shak. King Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shak. King Lear.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. Mat. xvii. 14.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ETRIBUTE. n. f. [knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worship or obeisance shown by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.

KNEEL. n. f. [cnil, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnýllan, to ring, Sax.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakespeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shak. Tempest.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shak. H. VIII.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives. [cnif, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakefp.

Blest powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æn.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryd.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cnicht, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shak. King Lear.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakefp.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent stile. Daniel's Civil War.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Among us the order of gentlemen next to the nobility, except the baronets.

The knight intends to make his appearance. Addison.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The

K N I

The ancient errant knights
 Won all their mistresses in fights;
 They cut whole giants into fritters,
 To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.
 That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Post. A hireling evidence.
 There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South's Sermons.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.
 Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
 One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adj. [from knight.] Becoming a knight; befitting a knight.
 Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws?
 As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
 Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
 As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.
 For that same knight's own sword this is of yore,
 Which Merlin made by his almighty art,
 For that his nourling, when he knighthood swore,
 Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
 And so defend thee heaven and thy valour. Shak. R. II.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
 A knighthood bought, to go a wooing in. Ben. Johnson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
 You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.
 Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
 That hast with knightless guise, and treacherous train,
 Fair knight-hood foully shamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT. v. n. preter. knit or knitted. [cneetan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.
 Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
 The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
 Balm of hurt minds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
 Those curious nets thy slender fingers knit. Waller.
2. To tie.
 Send for the county; go tell him of this;
 I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning. Shakespeare.
3. To join; to unite.
 His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
 And, knitting all his force, got one hand free. Fa. Queen.
 These, mine enemies, are all knit up
 In their distractions: they are in my power. Shakespeare.
 O let the vile world end,
 And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together. Shakesp. Henry VI.
 Lay your highness'
 Command upon me; to the which my duties
 Are with a most indissoluble tye
 For ever knit. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
 And the conjunction of our inward souls
 Married in league, coupled and link'd together
 With all religious strength of sacred vows. Shakespeare's King John.
 By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
 By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves. Shakesp.
 If ye be come peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you. Chro. xii. 17.
 That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love. Col. ii. 2.
 He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knittings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Wotton's Architect.
 Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
 Usurp the chair of wit! Ben. Johnson's New Inn.
 Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question. Bacon.
 These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one. Hayward.

K N O

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastick round. Milton.

God gave several abilities to several persons, that each might help to supply the publick needs, and, by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge. Wifeman's Surgery.

3. To contract.
 What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
 And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince. Addison's Cato.
4. To tie up.
 He saw heaven opened, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth. Acts x. 11.

To KNIT. v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.
 A young shepherdess knitting and fingering: her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice's musick. Sidney.
 Make the world distinguish Julia's son
 From the vile offspring of a trull, that sits
 By the town-wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
2. To join; to close; to unite.
 Our fever'd navy too
 Have knit again, and float, threat'ning most sea-like. Shak.

KNIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Texture.
 Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakespeare.

KNITTER. n. f. [from knit.] One who weaves or knits.
 The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
 And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
 Do use to chant it. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

KNITTINGNEEDLE. n. f. [knit and needle.] A wire which women use in knitting.
 He gave her a cuff on the ear, she would prick him with her knittingneedle. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

KNITTLE. n. f. [from knit.] A string that gathers a purse round. Ainsworth.

KNOB. n. f. [cnap, Saxon; knoop, Dutch.] A protuberance; any part bluntly rising above the rest.
 Just before the entrance of the right auricle of the heart is a remarkable knob or bunch, raised up from the subjacent fat; by the interposition whereof the blood falling down by the descending vein is diverted into the auricle. Ray.

KNOBBED. adj. [from knob.] Set with knobs; having protuberances.
 The horns of a roe deer of Greenland are pointed at the top, and knobbed or tuberos at the bottom. Grew.

KNOBBINESS. n. f. [from knobby.] The quality of having knobs.

KNOBBY. adj. [from knob.]

1. Full of knobs.
2. Hard; stubborn.

The informers continued in a knobby kind of obstinacy, resolving still to conceal the names of the authors. Howel.

To KNOCK. v. n. [cnucian, Saxon; cnoce, a blow, Welsh.]

1. To clash; to be driven suddenly together.
 Any hard body thrust forwards by another body contiguous, without knocking, giveth no noise. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 They may say, the atoms of the chaos being variously moved according to this catholick law, must needs knock and interfere. Bentley's Sermons.
2. To beat, as at a door for admittance.
 Villain, I say knock me at this gate,
 And rap me well; or I'll knock your knave's pate. Shak.
 Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
 Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
 To fright them, ere destroy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 I bid the rascal knock upon your gate,
 And could not get him for my heart to do it. Shakesp.
 For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
 Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.
Knock at your own breast, and ask your soul,
 If those fair fatal eyes edg'd not your sword. Dryden.
3. To KNOCK under. A common expression, that denotes when a man yields or submits.

To KNOCK. v. a.

1. To affect or change in any respect by blows.
 How do you mean removing him?
 —Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains. Shakespeare's Othello.
 He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is perfectly at liberty. Locke.
 Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
 His servants up, and rise by five o'clock;
 Instruct his family in ev'ry rule
 And send his wife to church, his son to school. Dryden.
2. To dash together; to strike; to collide with a sharp noise.
 So when the cook saw my jaws thus knock it,
 She would have made a pancake of my pocket. Cleaveland.
 At him he lanch'd his spear, and pierc'd his breast;
 On the hard earth the Lycian knock'd his head,
 And lay supine; and forth the spirit fled. Dryden.

K N O

- 'Tis the sport of statesmen,
When heroes knock their knotty heads together,
And fall by one another. Rowe.
3. To Knock down. To fell by a blow.
He began to knock down his fellow citizens with a great deal of zeal, and to fill all Arabia with an unnatural medley of religion and bloodshed. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 50.
A man who is gross in a woman's company, ought to be knocked down with a club. Clarissa.
4. To Knock on the head. To kill by a blow; to destroy.
He betook himself to his orchard, and walking there was knocked on the head by a tree. South's Sermons.
Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head;
or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground. Grew's Cosmol.
- KNOCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sudden stroke; a blow.
Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth should wave him from a knock perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vii.
Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden.
2. A loud stroke at a door for admission.
Guiscard, in his leathern frock,
Stood ready, with his thrice-repeated knock:
'Thrice with a doleful sound the jarring grate Rung deaf and hollow. Dryden's Boccace.
- KNOCKER. n. f. [from knock.]
1. He that knocks.
2. The hammer which hangs at the door for strangers to strike.
Shut, shut the door, good John! fatigu'd, I said,
Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead. Pope.
- To Knoll. v. a. [from knell.] To ring the bell, generally for a funeral.
Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- To Knoll. v. n. To sound as a bell.
If ever you have look'd on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church. Shakefp.
- KNOLL. n. f. A little hill. Ainsf.
- KNOP. n. f. [A corruption of knap.] Any tufty top. Ainsf.
- KNOT. n. f. [cnotta, Saxon; knot, German; knutte, Dutch;
knotte, Erse.]
1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.
He found that reason's self 'now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound. Sidney.
As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vestal's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the wind's expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.
2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.
Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.
Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakefp. Rich. II.
It fed flow'rs worthy of paradise, which not nice art
In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale, and plain. Milton.
Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. More.
Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-express'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.
3. Any bond of association or union.
Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on the crown. Shakefp.
I would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Why left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love. Shak.
Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade;
In this close knot, the smallest looseness made. Cowley.
4. A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a bough, and consequently by a transverse direction of the fibres. A joint in an herb.
Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood, and full of knots, he hath carved it diligently, when he had nothing else to do. Wisd.
Such knots and crossness of grain is objected here, as will - hardly suffer that form, which they cry up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in Scotland. King Charles.

5. A confederacy; an association; a small band.
Oh you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a conspiracy against me. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.
What is there here in Rome that can delight thee?
Where not a foul, without thine own foul knot,
But fears and hates thee. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
A knot of good fellows borrowed a sum of money of a gentleman upon the king's highway. L'Estrange.
I am now with a knot of his admirers, who make request that you would give notice of the window where the knight intends to appear. Addison's Spectator.
6. Difficulty; intricacy.
A man shall be perplexed with knots and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way soever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South's Sermons.
7. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.
When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knot of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines, because nothing then hindered the happiness of Torismond and Leonora. Dryden's Dufresny.
8. A cluster; a collection.
The way of fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knot of a number of small stars, not seen asunder, but giving light together. Bacon's Essays.
In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
- To Knot. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To complicate in knots.
Happy we who from such queens are freed,
That were always telling beads:
But here's a queen when she rides abroad
Is always *knott*ing threads. Sidley.
2. To intangle; to perplex.
3. To unite.
The party of the papists in England are become more knotted, both in dependence towards Spain, and amongst themselves. Bacon's War with Spain.
- To Knot. v. n.
1. To form buds, knots, or joints in vegetation.
Cut hay when it begins to knot. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. To knit knots for fringes.
KNO'TBERRYBUSH. n. f. A plant. Ainsf.
KNO'TGRASS. n. f. [knot and grass.] A plant.
KNO'TTED. adj. [from knot.] Full of knots.
The knotted oaks shall show'rs of honey weep. Dryden.
- KNO'TTINESS. n. f. [from knotty.] Fullness of knots; uneven-ness; intricacy; difficulty.
Virtue was represented by Hercules naked, with his lion's skin and knotted club: by his oaken club is signified reason ruling the appetite; the knottiness thereof, the difficulty they have that seek after virtue. Peacham on Drawing.
- KNO'TTY. adj. [from knot.]
1. Full of knots.
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
The timber in some trees more clean, in some more knotty:
try it by speaking at one end, and laying the ear at the other;
for if it be knotty, the voice will not pass well. Bacon.
The knotty oaks their list'ning branches bow. Roscommon.
One with a brand yet burning from the flame,
Arm'd with a knotty club another came. Dryden's Æn.
Where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burrs and thorns disgrace the ground:
Come, shepherds, come, and strew with leaves the plain;
Such funeral rites your Daphnis did ordain. Dryden.
2. Hard; rugged.
Valiant fools
Were made by nature for the wise to work with:
They are their tools; and 'tis the sport of statesmen,
When heroes knock their knotty heads together,
And fall by one another. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.
3. Intricate; perplexed; difficult; embarrassed.
King Henry, in the very entrance of his reign, when the kingdom was cast in his arms, met with a point of great difficulty, and knotty to solve, able to trouble and confound the wisest kings. Bacon's Henry VII.
Princes exercised skill in putting intricate questions; and he that was the best at the untying of knotty difficulties, carried the prize. L'Estrange.
Some on the bench the knotty laws untie. Dryden.
They compliment, they sit, they chat,
Fight o'er the wars, reform the state;
A thousand knotty points they clear,
'Till supper and my wife appear. Prior.

To KNOW. v. a. preter. I knew, I have known. [cnapan Saxon.]

1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come! Shakespeare.
The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men. Wisd. iv. 1.
The gods all things know. Milton.

Not from experience, for the world was new,
He only from their cause their natures knew. Denham.
We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it. Dryden.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, or is in danger to be mistaken, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to declare his meaning, and make known what idea he makes it stand for. Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.

Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you. 1 Sa. vi. 3.

Led on with a desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton.
One would have thought you had known better things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy. L'Estrange.

3. To distinguish.

Numeration is but the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after, and distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

4. To recognise.

What a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee? Shakespeare.
They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. Lu. xxiv. 35.
At nearer view he thought he knew the dead,
And call'd the wretched man to mind. Flatman.
Tell me how I may know him. Milton.

5. To be no stranger to.

What are you?
—A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shak. King Lear.

6. To converse with another sex.

And Adam knew Eve his wife. Gen. iv. 4.

7. To see with approbation.

They have reigned, but not by me; they have set a feig-niory over themselves, but I knew nothing of it. Hosea.

To KNOW. v. n.

1. To have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.

I kn w of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod. Acts xii. 11.

2. Not to be ignorant.

When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak.
Bacon's Essays, No. 27.

Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.

In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tillotson's Sermons.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pains will put on two of our jerkins and aprons; and sir John must not know of it.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

There is but one mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To KNOW for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.

He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he knew for. Shakesp. Henry IV.

5. To KNOW of In Shakespeare, is to take cognisance of; to examine.

Fair Hernia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For ay to be in shady cloister mew'd. Shakespeare.

KNO'WABLE. adj. [from kn.w.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.

These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these than in less acknowledged mysteries. Glanv. See f.

K N U

'Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses. Locke.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation. Bentley.

KNO'WER. n. f. [from know] One who has skill or knowledge.

If we look on a vegetable as made of earth, we must have the true theory of the nature of that element, or we miserably fail of our scientific aspirations; and while we can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers. Glanv.

I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry. Southern.

KNO'WING. adj. [from know.]

1. Skillful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.

You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain, Pursu'd my life. Shak. Hamlet.
The knowingest of these have of late reformed their hypothesis. Boyle.

What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.

The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South's Sermons.

Gio Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very drily, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison's Guardian.

2. Conscious; intelligent.

Could any but a knowing prudent Cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

KNO'WING. n. f. [from know.] Knowledge.

Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakespeare.

KNO'WINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world.
More's Divine Dialogues.

They who before were rather fond of it than knowingly admired it, might defend their inclination by their reason.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly. Atterbury's Sermons.

KNO'WLEDGE. n. f. [from know.]

1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.

Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions. Locke.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakesp.

3. Skill in any thing.

Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old know- ledge. Sidney.

That is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge
I never in my life did look on him. Shakesp. Rich. II.

5. Cognisance; notice.

Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? Ruth ii. 10.

A state's anger should not take
Knowledge either of fools or women. Ben. Johnson's Catil.

6. Information; power of knowing.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

To KNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [not in use.] To acknowledge; to avow.

The prophet Hosea tells us that God saith of the Jews,
they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow: for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not known by his revealed will. Bacon's holy War.

To KNU'BBLE. v. a. [knippler, Danish.] To beat. Skinner.

KNU'CKLE. n. f. [cnucle, Saxon; knockle, Dutch.]

1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.

Thus often at the Temple-stairs we've seen
Two tritons, of a rough athletic mien,
Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,
With knuckles bruis'd, and face besmear'd in blood. Garth.

2. The knee joint of a calf.

We find also that Scotch skinck, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and finews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. The articulation or joint of a plant.

Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, fennel, and corn.

Bacon's Natural History.

To KNU'CKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confession of an argumental defeat.

KNU'CKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.

The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and it is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth no boughs, though many stalks out of one root. Bacon's Nat. History.

KNUFF. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from knave, or the same with chuff.] A lout. An old word preserved in a rhyme of prediction.

The country knuffs, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
With clubs and clouted shoon,
Shall fill up Duffendale

With slaughtered bodies soon.

Hayward.

KNUR. } n. f. [knor, German.] A knot; a hard sub-

KNURLE. } stance.

The stony nodules found lodged in the strata, are called by the workmen knurs and knots. Woodward's Met. Foss.

KONED for knew. Spenser.

To KYD. v. n. [corrupted probably from cuð, Saxon.] To know.

But ah, unjust and worthless Colin Clout,
That kyd'st the hidden kinds of many a weed;
Yet kyd'st not one to cure thy sore heart root,
Whose rankling wound as yet doth rifely bleed.

Spenser.
